The narvadarars agreed to retain their narva tenure along with an assessment made tained by the survey. Held that the namdar was entitled to recover the one-fourth according to the scheme, which was binding on the whole body of assessment to a limit which is fair and equitable according to the custom of the country. As between the narvadarars and the Government, there is nothing to prevent the former from consenting to the exclusion of any part of the village lands from the contract. 1. ——— Right of appeal.—Act XVII of 1873 was not intended to deprive the Nawab Nazim of Moorshedabad of any right of appeal to the High Court which he had before it was passed. NAWAB NAZIM OF BENGAL v. AMRAO BEGUM 21 W. R., 59

2. ——— Submission of decree of Court as a claim to Commissioners—Power of High Court.—Certain judgment-creditors were held to have committed an error of judgment in submitting their decree to Commissioners appointed under Act XVII of 1873, as if it were a new and unascertained claim. Where this was done, and the Commissioners expressed their opinion upon the matter involved (although it had already been determined), the High Court held that it had no authority to enquire into their award. OMRAO BEGUM v. COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED UNDER ACT XVII OF 1873 24 W. R., 394

s. 11—Agreement for appropriation of payments—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 60—Suit for rent.—So far as the Nawab Nazim's Debts Act is concerned, rent due by the Nawab is on the same footing as any other debt incurred by him, and before his property can be made liable to satisfy such rent debt, the consent of the Governor General in Council must first be obtained to the issue of execution. ROOKMINY BULLUB ROY v. MULK JAMANIA BEGUM. I. L. R., 9 Calc., 914; 12 C. L. R., 534

1. ——— s. 12—Jurisdiction of Commissioners—Parties.—The Commissioners appointed under the Nawab Nazim's Debts Act (XVII of 1873) (an Act to provide for the liquidation of the debts of the Nawab Nazim, and for his protection from legal process), having ascertained and certified that a certain zamindari was nizamut property (i.e., held by the Government for the purpose of upholding the dignity of the Nawab Nazim for the time being), the fact that this property had, before the passing of the Act, been conveyed by the Nawab Nazim to his son, did not deprive the Commissioners of jurisdiction to deal with the question. The plain language of s. 12 of the Act is not controlled by any words in the preamble. A suit brought by a claimant against the Government and the grantee to recover the property, without the Nawab Nazim having been joined as a party, could not proceed. *OMRAO BEGUM v. with pegs, but the tents were taken down each monsoon. For two or three years previously to the accident, people had been accustomed to cross the land without any hindrance or prohibition. The plaintiff himself had used the path across the land, as a short cut, for a period of eighteen months. This path led across the tenting ground to a gate which was generally open, and which opened upon the high road. No express permission had ever been given to any of the persons who were in the habit of using this path. It was a mere beaten track, and, so far from being a public way, it was from time to time obstructed, in the tenting season, by the ropes and pegs of the tents. The plaintiff had for some time been in occupation of a bungalow belonging to the first defendants, which was situated in that part of the land which was furthest away from the high road. There was a regularly constructed roadway from the bungalow to the high road, which the plaintiff might have used, but, as a short cut, he and others were in the habit of using the beaten track. For this he had merely a tacit permission. On the morning of the 1st September 1885, he left his bungalow and went to his business, as usual, by the short cut across the land. When returning by the same way at about 11 o'clock at night he fell into the hole which had been dug in the afternoon of that day, and sustained the injuries complained of. The hole was several feet deep, and was dug right across the pathway. The plaintiff had no notice of the hole being dug, or of any intention to dig it. The night was very dark, and there was no negligence on the part of the plaintiff, nor any want of ordinary care and caution. There was no watchman and no fence, nor was there any light which might enable persons using the path to avoid the danger. The second defendant, as above stated, had agreed to take the said land from the first defendants on lease for building purposes. On the day of the accident, some months before the execution of the lease, the second defendant through his engineer and contractor H applied to the first defendants for permission to make "borings" in the land, which permission was given. H thereupon caused the hole in question to be dug. In their written statement the first defendants contended that in using the short cut across their land, the plaintiff was a trespasser, and that he had used it without their knowledge or consent; that the hole was dug without their knowledge, and that the "borings," for which they had given permission, were merely small holes of a diameter of six inches, or thereabouts, which could not have been a source of danger. The second defendant pleaded that at the time of the accident he was not in possession of the land, but had merely entered into an agreement for a lease of it; that he had employed a competent engineer and contractor, H, to make borings, in order to ascertain of what the sub-soil consisted, and that H contracted to do the work and obtain leave from the first defendants to enter on the land; that the said H subsequently entered on the land, and according to his own discretion and without any control or interference from him (the second defendant), took such steps as he thought necessary to ascertain the nature of the said sub-soil; and he (the second defendant) contended that, if there had been negligence in the performance of the work, he was not liable. Held (1) that there was negligence in digging the hole across a path used by several licensees, and in not placing any person or light to warn passengers of the danger arising from the hole and the excavated earth which was heaped up near it. Held (2) that the first defendants were not liable to the plaintiff. The permission which they had given to H was a permission to make "borings" only; and the hole, which was actually dug by H, was dug without their knowledge or permission. H was not shown to be in any sense their servant or agent. The plaintiff was a bare licensee, and the first defendants were under no obligation to him to keep the path in a safe state or in good order. Held (3) that the second defendant was liable to the plaintiff. H was not a contractor, in the legal sense, so as to exempt the second defendant from responsibility, but was the servant of the second defendant pro hac vice, and that the digging of the hole was within the course of his employment, or within the scope of his authority. The Court of first instance awarded, as damages, a sum of Rs3,000, which, on appeal, was reduced to Rs17,000. EVANS v. TRUSTEES OF THE PORT OF BOMBAY

6. ——— Suit for damages by parents of a child killed by negligence—Act XIII of 1855—Death by negligence—Contributory negligence—Liability for negligence of servants—Damages, Assessment of—Deduction for maintenance of child—Funeral expenses.—The plaintiff's unmarried daughter, a child of between five and six years old, fell into an open manhole of a sewer in a lane in Bombay on the 20th August 1880, between 4½ and 5 o'clock P.M., and, when her body was recovered, life was extinct. The sewer was vested in the Municipality of Bombay, and was under the control of the Municipal Commissioner by virtue of ss. 220 and 289 of the Bombay Municipal Act of 1888. When such manholes are opened, it is the duty of the Municipal Commissioner under s. 321 of that Act to have them properly fenced and guarded. On the 27th August 1880 the manhole in question was opened for the purpose of inserting a flushing-door in the sewer. From the time the manhole was opened until the occurrence of the accident the deceased child's mother was seated at the corner of the street selling cucumbers about four yards from the manhole in question. The hole was at first properly fenced with four timber hurdles about 4 feet high set upright round it at a distance of 2 feet from the hole, secured at the corners with ropes. Soon after 4-30 P.M., the superintendent in charge of the work gave orders to cease work and close the manhole for the night. The accident took place almost immediately afterwards. The Judge found on the evidence that the child fell into the open hole in the interval that elapsed between the taking down of the fence and putting the cover on the hole. What she was doing the instant before she fell, there was nothing to show. She was seen running and playing about the street during the afternoon. Her mother, who was sitting close by, did not see the accident, her attention being at the moment occupied by some customers. She admitted that before the accident occurred she knew the fence was down and the hole open and she would not have left the child go to it had she been playing beside her. Held (1) that the defendants were guilty of negligence and that they were liable for negligence of their servants although the latter acted

8 ———— Loss by fire—Sale set aside—Decree in favour of vendor—Possession—Purchaser in possession after decree and pending appeal—Accident—Liability for damage—Maxim, Volenti non fit injuria—The plaintiff and the second defendant A were brothers and worked a cotton press in partnership. In August 1854 A sold the press for R35 000 to V (the first defendant) who paid A R5 000 earnest money and was put into possession. The plaintiff then brought a suit (No 327 of 1854)

against A praying for a dissolution of the partnership. V was also a party defendant to that suit. The plaintiff alleged that R35 000 was much too low a price for the press and he objected to the sale. He prayed that A might be restrained from continuing in possession of the press and working it and that a receiver might be appointed to take possession of it until further order. On the 21st April 1855 on a motion the Court refused to grant an injunction and receiver, but ordered V to pay R30 000 (i.e., the balance of the purchase money) to the solicitors of the parties for investment until the hearing of the suit and directed that if that sum was not paid by the 21st May 1855 a receiver should be appointed to take possession of the press. The suit (i.e., No 327 of 1854) was heard on the 15th February 1857, when it was held by the Court that the sale by A to V was without authority that the defendant V took nothing under it and that the plaintiff was entitled to have it set aside. Certain matters still remained to be decided but on the 28th February 1857 the decree in the suit was made having effect to the findings already arrived at on the 15th February. The decree by consent directed various accounts to be taken and among others an account of the profits realized by the working of the press by the defendant V since his possession thereof credit being given to him for all sums expended by him in the repairs, maintenance and working of the said press and for the management thereof by him. The decree further ordered that the defendant V should be repaid the R30 000 which he had paid under the order of the 21st April 1855 and directed that on such payment the said defendant V do forthwith give over possession of the press to the plaintiff and the defendant A. The defendant V at once gave notice of his intention to appeal. There was a long delay in drawing up the decree. The minutes were spoken to on the 31st March 1857 the decree was sealed on the 13th April 1857. Meantime on the 6th April 1857, and while the defendant V was still in possession a fire broke

1857 the plaintiff filed the present suit claiming to recover R50 000 from the defendant V as the value of the press or such further sum as might be necessary to rebuild and restore it. He alleged that the fire was caused by the working of the press and contended that the working of the press by the defendant V after the decree of the 28th February was an act of trespass by him and that therefore independently of the question whether the fire was caused by the negligence of V and his servants the said V was liable for the loss occasioned by the fire. Held that independently of negligence, the defendant V was not liable to the plaintiff for the loss occasioned by the fire. Down to the decree of the 28th February 1857, the defendant in keeping possession of the press and working it was no doubt, a trespasser, but subsequently to that decree he remained in possession and worked the press with the consent of the plaintiff. The maxim volenti non fit injuria, applied to the circumstances of the case. Held also that, no negligence having been proved against the defendant, the suit must be dismissed. JAMSETJI BURJORJI BAHADURJI v. EBRAHIM VIDINA . . . I. L. R., 13 Bom., 183

9. ————— Penal Code, s. 289—Negligence with respect to animals.—To sustain a charge under s. 289 of the Penal Code, there should be evidence not only of negligence, but also that such negligence would probably lead to danger to human life or of grievous hurt. ANONYMOUS

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS, SUMMARY PROCEDURE ON—

Act V of 1866, the Act mentioned in the following cases, was repealed and its provisions re-enacted in the Civil Procedure Code. See CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE, 1882, ss. 532, 538.

1. ————— Return of summons—Procedure.—In a suit under Act V of 1866, the summons should be returned in the usual way; and after the expiration of the required time, an order of the Court or a decree should be obtained. SCHILLER v. MARKER . . . 1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 283

2. ————— Time to obtain leave to defend—Act V of 1866, s. 3.—Although Act V of

1866, s. 3, only gives the defendant seven days to get leave to come in and defend on action on a bill, note, etc., the Court must be satisfied before granting a decree that the defendant has had a full opportunity to obtain leave to defend. GROB v. PALMER

[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 395

3. ————— Extension of time for appearance—Jurisdiction.—Where, in a suit under Act V of 1866, the defendant is at such a distance as would make it impossible for him to put in an appearance within the seven days allowed by the Act, the Court will stay execution for a time long enough to allow him to appear. Suits cannot be brought under this Act against persons resident out of the jurisdiction. CHANDRAKANT ROY v. POGOSH

[3 B. L. R., O. C., 83

4. ————— Leave to appear and defend—Practice—Costs.—The Court will give leave to a defendant to appear and defend in suits under Act V of 1866, where he shows a defence apparently real; but where there is a doubt as to the bona fides of the defence, payment of money into Court will be ordered or security directed to be given. The Court has, in giving leave to defend, a discretion to order security for costs, not only where it doubts the bona fides of the defence, but also if it considers the matter of defence raised is unnecessary, though allowable. If the plaintiff has not been heard at first against the defendant's application, the Court will always allow him to come in afterwards and show that the leave ought not to have been granted, or, if granted at all, in more stringent terms. VONLENITZ v. NARAYAN SING . . . 6 B. L. R., Ap., 64

5. ————— Leave to defend.—In an action on a promissory note under this Act the defendant was allowed to come in and defend after the plaintiff had obtained a decree; the decree was set aside and written statements ordered. JOSEPH v. SOLANO

6. ————— Notarial protest—Evidence of dishonour—Hundi—Bill of exchange.—A notarial protest of any bill of exchange noted at any time after the passing of Act V of 1866 is prima facie evidence that the bill has been dishonoured under s. 13 of that Act, although the sections relating to summary procedure on bills of exchange did not come into operation till May 1st, 1866. A hundi, which contains a direction on sufficient consideration to the drawee, and accepted by him, is within the terms of the Act, and such a document is assignable without any regular form of endorsement, if sufficient cause appears in the handwriting of an endorser to indicate an intention to assign it. EAST INDIA BANK v. KHOJAH VILLIE GOOLWANY

[1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 247

7. ————— Decree—Right of plaintiff suing under the Act.—Under the summary procedure on Bills of Exchange Act (V of 1866), the plaintiff is entitled to claim by his summons and obtain by his decree whatever sum, principal and interest, is, on the legal construction of the instrument, demandable. DESORZA v. RANGAIAN . . . 6 Mad., 257

8. ————— Promissory note
—Consideration—Evidence—In a suit under the Bills of Exchange Act to recover Rs. 1,200 on a promissory note the Court gave a decree for Rs. 700 only, that being shown to have been the full consideration received for the note RAMLAL MOOKERJEE v. HARAN CHANDRA DHAR

[3 B. L. R., O. C., 130; 12 W. R., O. C., 9

9. ————— Promissory note
—Endorsement struck out—Evidence—A plant was presented under Act V of 1866 by the endorsees of a promissory note endorsed as follows "Received from the Chartered Mercantile Bank—J M Reid, Agent" The note had not been paid when presented, and the endorsement was struck out Admission of the plant was refused, unless evidence was given that the note had been paid, and to explain why the endorsement was struck out. As under Act V of 1866 evidence could not be received, the plant was not admitted. CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK v. SECORDE

3 B. L. R., O. C., 148

10. ————— Suit on promissory note payable by instalments—Where a promissory note is payable by instalments, and contains a stipulation that, on default in payment of the first instalment, the whole amount is to become due, a suit to recover the whole amount on default made in payment of the first instalment cannot be brought under Act V of 1866 REMPY v. SHILLINGFORD

[I. L. R., 1 Calc., 130

11. ————— Costs—Suit under Rs. 500—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—In an undefended suit brought under Act V of 1866 on a promissory note for Rs. 42, there was nothing in the petition to show that the suit could not have been brought in the Small Cause Court, the High Court gave a decree for amount of note and costs *DUFF v. The purchaser of a certain estate paying revenue to Government agreed with the vendors, shortly after the sale, that they should retain a certain portion of such estate free of rent, and that he would pay the revenue payable in respect of such portion. In 1853 in a suit by the vendors against the purchaser to enforce this agreement, the Sudder Court held that the revenue payable in respect of such portion of the estate was payable by the purchaser. In 1876, on a fresh settlement of the estate, the representatives in title of the purchaser applied to the settlement officer to settle such portion of the estate with the representative in title of the vendors. The settlement officer refused this application, but it was subsequently allowed by the superior revenue authorities. The representative in title of the vendors then sued the representatives in title of the purchaser in the Civil Court, claiming that he might, in accordance with the agreement between the vendors and the purchaser, be exempted from paying revenue in respect of such portion, as against the defendants, without any injury to the Government that the defendants might be ordered to pay as heretofore such revenue and that the defendants might be ordered never to claim or demand from him any revenue they might be compelled to pay in respect of such portion.”
Held per SPANKIE, J., that, assuming that the agreement between the vendors and the purchaser was obtain a declaration that, as between him and the defendants, the latter were bound to pay revenue in respect of such portion, the suit was not barred by cl (b), s 241 of Act XIX of 1873. Also that, although the revenue authorities might regard the decision of the Sudder Court as binding on the parties then before the Court, for the currency of the then settlement, that decision, that settlement having expired, and s 83 of Act XIX of 1873 having come into force, could not control the power of the revenue authorities to settle the land in question with the

2. ——— Usufructuary mortgage—Ex-proprietary tenant—Sir land.—Held by the Full Bench (OLDFIELD and BRODHURST, JJ., dissenting) that a person who creates a usufructuary mortgage of zamindari property becomes an ex-proprietary or occupancy-tenant of the sir land under s. 7 of the N.-W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881). Per PETHERAM, C.J.—A usufructuary mortgagee is, for the time being, the proprietor of the property, inasmuch as a proprietor is the person entitled to exclusive possession at the time; and the intention of the Legislature, as expressed in s. 7 of the Rent Act, is that, when a zamindar ceases to be entitled to occupy the sir land as proprietor, he shall have the right to occupy it as an ex-proprietary tenant under s. 5. Bhagwan Singh v. Murlí Singh, I. L. R., 1 All., 549, dissented from. Per STRAIGHT, J.—The words “lose” and “part with” in s. 7 of the Rent Act were intended to cover all cases in which a proprietor of land has either voluntarily or by operation of law deprived himself permanently or temporarily of the power to exercise full proprietary right over his property. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The meaning of the words "proprietary rights" in s 7 of the Rent Act is equivalent to that of the term "full ownership," corresponding to dominium in the Roman law and fee-simple estate in English law. The right of a usufructuary mortgagee cannot be called proprietorship, and having regard to s 58 of the Transfer of Property Act the execution of a usufructuary mortgage does not amount to a transfer of the proprietary right. The word "lose" as used in s 7 of the Rent Act means the transfer of proprietary rights otherwise than by the will of the owner in consequence of some incident of law. The term "part with" is a general expression including both absolute and temporary alienation, and a usufructuary mortgage is a "parting with" some of the incidents of ownership, and falls within the purview of s 7, inasmuch as the rights of possession and of the enjoyment of the usufruct are transferred from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, though such a transfer does not amount to a total alienation of proprietorship. Bhagwan Singh v Murli Singh, 1 L R, 1 All, 549, dissented from Gopal Pandey v Parasotam Das, 1 L R, 5 All, 121, Ganga Din v Dhurandhar Singh, 1 L R, 5 All, 495, and Gulab Ras v Indar Singh, 1 L R, 6 All, 54, referred to. Per O'DRISCOLL, J.—The words "lose or part with his proprietary rights in any mehal" in s 7 of the Rent Act mean a loss or parting which divests absolutely of all proprietary rights leaving no interest of a proprietary kind in the mehal, this does not happen in a usufructuary mortgage, and therefore the latter is not a loss or parting with, proprietary rights with in the meaning of s 7. Bhagwan Singh v. Murli Singh, 1 L R, 1 All, 549, approved. Per BROOKHURST, J.—The word "lose" in s 7 of the Rent Act means involuntarily lose, as for instance, by auction sale and "part with" means voluntarily and entirely divested of by means, e.g., of gift or private sale. "Proprietary rights" means the whole of the proprietary rights, and a usufructuary mortgagee of zamindari property cannot be said to have lost or parted with his proprietary right therein, and therefore does not, under the provisions of s 7 of the Rent Act, become an expropriatory or occupancy tenant of the said land. INDAR SEN v NAUBAT SINGH. 1 L R, 7 All, 553

He sued for recovery of possession of the land. Held that the defendants, being ex-proprietary tenants of the land in dispute, were entitled to hold possession thereof, by operation of law, with reference to the terms of s 7 of the N-W P Rent Act, and the plaintiff's contention that because for four or five years the defendants failed to assert their expropriatory tenant rights they were debarred from doing so, could only be well founded if there had been any provision either in the Limitation Act or the Rent Act creating such a disability. Held also that, notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiff was in possession of the land in dispute as mortgagee at the time of the sale, and continued in possession afterwards, his vendor must be taken to have "held" the land as his at the time of the sale of his proprietary interest, within the meaning of s 7 of the Rent Act. HARJAS v RADHA KISHAN and it was stated in the deed that half the mortgage-money due to K on the mortgage of 1869 was due by the executors, and that they accordingly left the same with the mortgagees in order that the latter might redeem. In November 1876 H's 5 biswas share, together with its sir land, was sold in execution of a decree. Subsequently, K, alleging that the mortgagees under the deed of 1872 and the purchasers under the execution-sale of 1876 had dispossessed him, and that his mortgage-debt had not been paid, sued to recover possession of the 87 bighas of sir land, by virtue of his mortgage-deed of 1869. The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff was not entitled to enforce his mortgage in respect of F's and W's share in the 87 bighas, because they were not parties to the deed of 1869. The lower Appellate Court further held that from the date of the execution-sale of November 1876 H became an ex-proprietary tenant of his sir land, and that to give the plaintiff possession thereof would be contrary to the provisions of s. 7 of Act XVIII of 1873 (N.-W. P. Rent Act). Held that, inasmuch as it was clear that at the time when the mortgage-deed of 1869 was executed F and W were aware of the transaction which made K, the mortgagee, under the deed, of the whole property, and that, knowing this, they allowed the possession of A, J, and H to appear as if covering the entire zamindari rights in the 10 biswas share of the sir land, and inasmuch as the statements contained in the mortgage-deed of 1872 were an admission on the part of F and W that the mortgage of 1869 was executed with their consent, the equitable doctrine contained in s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act applied to the case and F and W had no defence, either in law or in equity, to the plaintiff's suit, with reference to their shares, and for the purpose of obviating the lien of 1869. Ramcoomar Koondoo v. McQueen, 11 B. L. R., 46, referred to. Per MAHMOOD, J., with reference to the effect of the execution-sale of November 1876, in regard to the provisions of s. 7 of Act XVIII of 1873, that the general rule that statutory provisions have no retrospective operation did not apply to the case; that, by reason of the sale, H, who had proprietary rights in the mehal, and held the 5 biswas share of the sir as such (the word "held" as used in s. 7 of the Rent Act not being confined to manual or physical holding), lost his proprietary rights, and so became an ex-proprietary tenant of the land belonging to him at that time; that although the mortgage of 1869 must not be so affected as to deprive the mortgagee of all his rights, yet by the terms of s. 7 of Act XVIII of 1873 and by virtue of the sale his means of benefiting by the mortgage were necessarily changed; that neither the preamble nor s. 1 of the Act contained any saving clause which would justify the interpretation that all the conditions included in a usufructuary mortgage are to be exempted from the operation of the Act, or of s. 7 in particular, merely because the mortgage was a subsisting one: that under these circumstances possession must be given to the plaintiff of such rights as H had at the time of the mortgage, subject only to H's rights as an ex-proprietary tenant; that the rights of the purchaser of H's share under the sale were subject to the mortgage of 1869; and that by virtue of the rule enunciated in s. 48 of the Transfer of Property Act, the rights of the mortgagees under the deed of 1872 must give way to the incidents of the prior deed of 1869, both mortgages being usufructuary. Tulshi v. Radha Kishan, Weekly Notes, Ali., 1886, p. 74, referred to. Per TYRRELL, J., that in 1876, by reason of the execution sale, the sir rights and interests of H mortgaged by him in 1869, as such, went out of existence, and assumed a different character; that over that tenure in its altered character the plaintiff, though he still had his mortgage charge, had not, in the existing state of the law, a right to physical possession of the actual land; and that, subject to this new right of H's, the plaintiff retained his mortgage charge of 1869 over the zamindari interest in the portion of the land acquired by H's vendees. KARAMAT KHAN v. SAMUD-DIN . . . I. L. R., 8 All., 409

7. ——— and s. 14—Suit for profits—Ex-proprietary tenant—Sir land held equally.—A certain mehal, of which the plaintiff in this suit claimed a one-third share of the profits for a certain year, belonged in equal shares to the defendant (lambardar), and S and R, his two brothers, who had certain sir land in partnership. The plaintiff had acquired the share of S by auction-purchase, S thus becoming an ex-proprietary tenant. The sir land was not included in the rent-roll of the mehal, but was admitted by the defendant to be assessable with rent at a certain rate per bigha. Held that, whatever might be the course proper to be taken for the purpose of assessing such sir land or S's share of it with rent, and notwithstanding that such course had not been taken, the plaintiff was entitled in this suit to claim and obtain his share in the profits of the sir land. *MUHAMMAD ALI v. For two years in succession M sublet such land in part or in whole for a less amount than such nominal rental; the third year such land lay fallow. Certain persons sued as co-sharers in the mehal to recover from M their share of the profits on account of such years. M set up as a defence to the suit that there were no profits—on the contrary, a small loss. The lower Courts held M answerable for the rental recorded. Held that it was doubtful whether the provisions of s. 209 of Act XVIII of 1873 were applicable in the present case, and that, even if such provisions were applicable, the lower Courts having neither found that more was realized from the land than had been accounted for by M, nor that the failure to realize more was owing to gross negligence or misconduct on his part, the decree of the lower Courts could not be sustained. On the 18th April 1879 the plaintiffs sued the Committee for a declaration of their right to establish a market on such land and for a perpetual injunction restraining the Collector as President of the Committee from interfering with their so doing. The cause of action alleged was the refusal of the Committee of the 26th November 1878. Held by STUART C J on the question whether such suit was barred by the provisions of s 43 of Act XV of 1873 not having been brought within three months next after the date of the alleged cause of action that it was not so barred inasmuch as the provisions of that section were only applicable to suits brought against a Committee for something done under that Act in

Also that the rejection of the lessee's application gave the plaintiffs a cause of action, as there was privity between them and the lessee and that as there was nothing in the Municipal rules prohibiting the presentation of an application by post the application of the plaintiffs should not have been rejected. Held by DUTHOIT J that the suit of the plaintiffs was governed by the provisions of s 43 of Act XV of 1873 and was therefore beyond time. Municipal Committee of Moradabad v

1. ——— s. 55—Municipal Board—Power of Municipal Boards to frame bye-laws—N.-W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act (XV of 1873), s. 22—Nuisance.—Cl. (c) of s. 55 of Act XV of 1883 was not intended to empower a Municipal Board to make rules which would enable it to confiscate private rights without making any compensation, or to treat as nuisances acts which are not in law or with regard to public health or convenience capable of being considered nuisances. The clause was meant to give to Municipal Boards power to make rules for prohibiting the establishment of markets, that is, to prevent new markets being established, and to give them power to control the maintenance of existing markets or of markets which might be established with their sanction. By "maintenance" is meant the keeping up of a market in such a manner as would make it a fit place for the carrying on of a market having regard to public health and public convenience. *GANGA NARAIN v. 2. ——— Municipal bye-law, Presumption as to validity of.—Where a person was tried for and convicted of a breach of certain bye-laws purporting to have been duly passed by a Municipal Board, it was held that the presumption was that such bye-laws had been passed with due regard to the necessary procedure and were not illegal, and that it lay upon the accused to object to their validity, and was no part of the duty of a Court exercising appellate or revisional jurisdiction to enter of its own motion into the question whether such rules had been properly framed in accordance with the provisions of the law on that subject. *Municipality of Sholapur v. 2. ——— and s. 71—Municipal rules—Infringement of rules—Prosecutions—N.-W. P. Government Notification No. 865, dated the 3rd November 1869—Rule VI, Legality of.—Municipal Boards and Magistrates should see that, before prosecutions are instituted under the municipal rules, care is taken that the requirements of s. 69 of Act XV of 1883 (N.-W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act) are satisfied. A District Magistrate, who was also Chairman of a Municipal Board, having information that a certain person had evaded the payment of octroi duty, directed his prosecution for breach of municipal rules. The Magistrate, in thus causing proceedings to be taken, acted wholly of his own motion and authority. The accused was tried and convicted under Rule 6, Government, N.-W. P., Notification No. 865, dated the 3rd November 1869, read with s. 45 of Act XV of 1873 (N.-W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act). This rule provided that any person evading or abetting the evasion of the octroi duties specified in a schedule should be deemed to have committed an infringement of a bye-law. It purported to have been made under s. 12 of Act VI of 1868 (Municipal Improvements Act, N.-W. P.), which authorized the making of "rules as to the persons by whom, and the manner in which, any assessment of taxes under this Act shall be confirmed, and for the collection of such taxes." Held that, assuming the rule to have been legally made under s. 12 of Act VI of 1868, which was not clear, and that it was saved by s. 2 of Act XV of 1873, it would, as declared in s. 71 of Act XV of 1883 (N.-W. P. and Oudh Municipalities Act), continue in force until repealed by new rules made under such last-mentioned Act, and be deemed to have been made under that Act, and its operation was therefore subject to the provisions of that Act, and among them to s. 69, which made it a condition precedent to the institution of a prosecution against the petitioner, that there should be a complaint of the Municipal Board or of some person authorized by the Board in that behalf. Held that the position of the Magistrate of the district in connection with s. 69 was neither better nor worse than that of any other member of the Board, and unless he had been duly authorized by the Board as a Board, he had no more locus standi to cause a prosecution to be instituted personally than any other individual member; and the words of s. 69 being mandatory, and the petitioner having from the outset urged this objection to the legality of the proceedings, he was entitled to the benefit of it now, and the conviction was illegal and must be set aside. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 29. ——— Disputed possession of temple—Criminal Procedure Code (1882), s. 144—Magistrate, Jurisdiction of.—The District Temple Committee dismissed the trustees of a certain temple and appointed others. The dismissed trustees retained possession. A breach of the peace having become imminent in the opinion of a Deputy Magistrate he made an order, under the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 144, directing the newly-appointed trustees not to interfere with the temple or its management. Held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order, and the High Court declined to interfere on revision. PALANIAPPA CHETTI v. DORASAMI AYYAR

[I. L. R., 18 Mad., 402]

30. ——— Order as to procession in public streets—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 518—Public worship—Conflict of rights—Duty of Magistrate when public peace threatened.—In affording special protection to persons assembled for religious worship or religious ceremonies, the law points to congregational rather than private worship, and it may fairly be required of congregations that they should inform the Magistrate or police at what hours they customarily assemble for worship, in order that the rights of other persons may not be unduly curtailed. No sect is entitled to deprive others for ever of the right to use the public streets for processions, on the plea of the sanctity of their place of worship or on the plea that worship is carried on therein day and night. The duties of a Magistrate in cases where the public peace is likely to be disturbed by one sect attempting to prevent another from using the public streets for processions, discussed. The principles laid down in Muthealu Chetti v. Bapun Saib, I. L. R., 2 Mad., 140, examined, explained, and approved. SUNDRAM v. QUEEN. PONNUSAMI v. QUEEN

[I. L. R., 6 Mad., 203]

31. ——— Order to remove embankment—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 62.—The Subordinate Magistrate issued an order to two persons directing them to remove a certain embankment, whereby the adjacent lands of the complainant were in danger of being flooded. Held that the act of the defendant was not an act which could be prohibited by the Subordinate Magistrate under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. ANONYMOUS interfered with the drainage of the country and tended to the injury of the crops and of the inhabitants. The High Court held that s. 62 did not authorize the passing of such an order. QUEEN v. GOLAM DARBESH

33. ——— Trespass by cattle—Penal Code, s. 188.—A Magistrate issued an order warning owners of cattle to take proper care of them; and that in case of disobedience or neglect they would be punished according to law, and did punish them for disobedience under s. 188 of the Penal Code. Held that the Magistrate was not competent, under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1861, to pass such an order. The order contemplated under that section is in the nature of an injunction, and such an order passed by a Magistrate would not be legal. The conviction under s. 188 of the Penal Code was therefore illegal. IN THE MATTER OF AMIRADDI

The Sessions Judge, being of opinion that the Magistrate should have gone on with the case, directed a further inquiry under s. 133. Such inquiry was held, and the Magistrate, without taking evidence in support of the complaint, made his conditional order under s. 133 absolute under s. 137. Held that the order of the Sessions Judge, directing a further inquiry, was ultra vires, there being no section of the Code under which an order for further inquiry could be made in the case, s. 437 having no application. Held also that the Magistrate, before whom the petitioner showed cause, should not have made his conditional order under s. 133 absolute without taking evidence upon the matter of the complaint: the words "evidence in the matter" meaning "in the matter of the complaint," and not simply evidence which the opposite party might offer. SRINATH ROY v. A Magistrate cannot take upon himself to decide questions of fact and Mahomedan law, so as to satisfy himself as to what are the actual rights of the parties to the lands in dispute. If he has good reasons to believe that such a dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace, the law enables him to ascertain and maintain actual possession, or, if it is shewn that the members of the family are inclined to break the peace, he can bind them all over to keep the peace. Where there was a dispute between the parties, who were related to one another as to the amount of their shares to certain property which was claimed on the one hand to be joint in certain shares, and on the other hand to exclusively belong to the other party, and no proceedings had been taken under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, nor was there anything to show that there was any probability of a breach of the peace, the Magistrate passed the following order: "The applicants must not plough more than 12 annas of the land." Held that such an order could not properly fall within s. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as an order under that section could only be passed on some emergency and would have effect for only two months. The present order in its operation would have effect, and was intended to have effect, until the parties went to a Civil Court to settle their disputes, and no emergency was even suggested. That the order therefore was entirely without any authority of law and must be set aside. DAIMULLA TALUKHDAR v. MAHARULLA TALUKHDAR [I. L. R., 27 Cal., 918]

84. ——— Obstruction in public way—Inquiry under s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882)—Previous orders when no bar to such inquiry.—An application was made under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) for the removal of an obstruction in a public thoroughfare, but after a personal local inspection by the Magistrate and without any evidence being taken, the parties were referred to a civil suit, and the order was refused, the Magistrate holding that the way was not a public way. A civil suit was then filed, and during its pendency a second application was made under s. 133 of Act X of 1882, with a like object, which was refused on the ground that the civil suit was pending, and that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace. The civil suit resulted in the way being held to be a public thoroughfare. A third application was then made under s. 133 to have the obstruction removed, but the Magistrate held that in face of the two previous orders he could not interfere. Held that the order of the Magistrate was wrong, upon the ground that he was bound to make such inquiry, and as there never had been any inquiry

93. ——— Order to pull down house—Criminal Procedure Code, 1861, s. 308—Report of jurors—Illegal order—Obstruction to public way.—The Magistrate of a district issued an order, under s. 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, calling upon the petitioner to remove a building, on the ground that it was unlawful obstruction upon a high road. A jury of five persons was appointed by the Magistrate's successor, under s. 310, to report within fifteen days whether the order was reasonable and proper. The jurors, being without instruction, took different views as to the performance of their duties; but four of them visited the premises, and were unanimous in finding that the building complained of was not on the high road at all. Five days after receiving reports to this effect, the Magistrate issued another order to the petitioner, requiring him to pull down his house within fifteen days, as the jurors had made no report within the time prescribed. The petitioner showed cause under s. 313, but without effect, and the order was repeated. The proceedings were ultimately forwarded to the Sessions Judge, whose successor in office returned them with the remark that nothing appeared to have been done contrary to the law for the removal of nuisances. Held that the petitioner had shown sufficient cause to satisfy the Magistrate, under s. 313, that the order to pull down the house was not reasonable and proper. *REG. v. 96. ——— Functions of jury—Obstruction—Public thoroughfare—Procedure.—Before a Magistrate can make an order under s. 521 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to remove an obstruction from a path alleged to be a public thoroughfare, he must first, in a proceeding held under s. 532, have come to the conclusion that the path is open to the use of the public. The only functions which a jury appointed under s. 523 can exercise are to consider whether the order made by the Magistrate under s. 521 is reasonable and proper, it being no part of their duty to determine the rights of parties in property. Held therefore that where a Magistrate, through a mistaken view of the law, ordered the removal of an obstruction on a pathway under s. 521, and had further submitted this order to the consideration of a jury appointed under s. 523, before he had himself come to a conclusion whether such pathway was a public thoroughfare, the only course left open to him under such circumstances was to stay all proceedings initiated under s. 521, and take action under s. 532. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF CHUNDER NATH SEN

127. — Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 268, 283-290.—The mere fact of an encroachment on a tidal navigable river does not necessarily amount to a public nuisance so as to render a person causing such encroachment liable to punishment under s. 290 of the Penal Code, but there must be evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in s. 268. In the matter of the petition of Umesh Chandra Kar, I. L. R., 14 Calc., 656, considered and commented on. The rule laid down in that case to the effect that any encroachment, however slight, on a tidal navigable river constitutes an offence under s. 290, is too widely stated. Each case should be determined on its own merits, and a decision arrived at as to whether the encroachment has caused an obstruction or not. The petitioner was charged with having erected a jag in a tidal navigable river, constructed of trees and dams, and thereby having committed offences under ss. 283 and 290 of the Penal Code. There was evidence to show that the jag was about 45 cubits long and 20 cubits broad, and that it was erected on the silted side of the river where it was about 300 fathoms broad, and that it did not obstruct the ordinary navigation of the river. The lower Court held that the jag could not but cause an obstruction, and convicted the petitioner under s. 283. Held that, as there was no evidence to show that the petitioner had caused any danger, obstruction, or injury to any person in any public way or line of navigation, the conviction under that section could

But where certain Mahomedans, for a religious purpose, killed two cows before sunrise in a private compound partly visible from a public road, and the killing of one of the cows only was witnessed by one Hindu. —Held that the circumstances proved did not amount to the commission of a public nuisance as defined in s. 268 of the Code. *Muttumira v. On the 11th May 1895 certain persons, in defiance of this order, cremated a corpse at the spot interdicted, and were convicted under ss. 188 and 290 of the Penal Code, but the conviction under s. 188 was reversed on appeal. Held that, when persons entitled to use a particular spot dedicated for the communal purpose of cremation use it for that purpose in a manner neither unusual nor calculated to aggravate the inconveniences necessarily incidental to such an act as is generally performed in this country, they cannot be convicted of a public nuisance on the ground that their act caused material annoyance and discomfort to persons near the place on the occasion referred to. Held further that the order of the District Magistrate was not warranted by s. 143, Criminal Procedure Code, or by any other law, and must therefore be set aside. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 1. ——— s. 8—Oath purporting to affect a third person—Revocation of consent to be bound by statement made on oath taken in a particular form.—The plaintiff in a civil suit offered to be bound by the statement which the defendant might make on oath holding the arm of his son. The defendant accepted the proposal, took the required oath, and made a statement which had the effect of defeating the plaintiff's claim. When the defendant came into Court to take the oath, the plaintiff attempted to revoke his proposal, but alleged no further reason than that he did not understand what he had intended, and did not think the defendant would speak the truth. Held that the form of oath above indicated ought not, having regard to s. 8 of Act X of 1873, to have been administered; but as it had been administered, and was a form of oath especially binding upon Hindus, the statement made upon it should be accepted. Held also that, when one party to a suit offers to be bound by the oath of the other party, and such other party accepts the proposal, the party so offering to be bound should not be allowed to revoke his proposal except upon the strongest possible grounds proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be genuine grounds for revoking the proposal. *Lekh Raj Singh v. The expression "party to a judicial proceeding" in s. 8 of the Act does not include either the complainant or the accused in a criminal case. In the course of a trial on a charge of assault the complainant's pleader agreed to be bound by the evidence on oath of a material witness, provided he swore on the Gita (a sacred book of the Hindus). The witness took the required oath, and stated that there was no assault, but merely a taking held of the hand. The Magistrate did not believe this witness, and proceeded with the trial. He convicted the accused on the other evidence in the case, and sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 25. Held that the Magistrate was not bound to decide the case on the evidence of the witness who swore the special oath. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. evidence to be considered in the case together with the other evidence. In this case there was abundant other evidence, all of which was in favour of the plaintiff, and his refusal to take the oath did not necessarily constitute a sufficient reason to set aside that evidence. A party who makes an oath as prescribed by his adversary confers by so doing on his statement the character of conclusive proof, but his mere refusal to make the oath does not, under the terms of the Oaths Act (X of 1873), justify any legal presumption against him. Such refusal is to be considered merely as a piece of conduct to be considered along with the other evidence. CHINTAMAN BHAT v. SHRINIVAS BHAT [I. L. R., 22 Bom., 680

1. ————— Murder—Beng. Reg. IV of 1797—Act XVII of 1862—General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868), s. 6—Repeal of statute, Effect of—Right of defence to High Court.—Up to the 1st January 1862, a person committing the offence of murder was liable to trial and punishment under the Regulations. By Act XVII of 1862 the Regulations prescribing punishments for offences were repealed "except as to any offence committed before the 1st January 1862." By the same Act it was declared that no person who should claim the same should be deprived of any right of appeal or reference which he would have enjoyed under such Regulations. By s. 6 of Act I of 1868, the repeal of an Act does not affect anything done, or any offence committed, or any fine or penalty incurred before the repealing Act shall have come into operation. Under the provisions of this section, the repeal of Act XVII of 1862 by Act VIII of 1868 and Act X of 1872 did not, in respect of offences committed before the 1st January 1862, affect the penalties prescribed by such Regulations, nor were any of the Regulations prescribing punishments for offences, which were in force before the passing of Act XVII of 1862, repealed in respect of offences committed before the 1st January 1862, prior to the passing of Act I of 1868. Held accordingly, where a person committed murder in the year 1855, that such person was punishable under the Regulations. Held also that, inasmuch as such right as the right of reference given by s. 3 of Regulation IV of 1797 accrues on conviction, and therefore in the present case had not accrued before Act XVII of 1862 was repealed, it is doubtful whether a person convicted of murder committed before the 1st January 1862 has such right. EMPERESS OF INDIA v. IV of 1797—Act XIII of 1862—General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868), s. 6—Repeal of statute, Effect of.—The prisoner was found guilty and sentenced under Regulation IV of 1797 to transportation for life, for a murder committed in 1861, before the Penal Code came into operation, and the case was sent up to the High Court to confirm the sentence. Regulation IV of 1797 was repealed by Act XVII of 1862, and that Act was wholly repealed by Acts VIII of 1868 and X of 1872. Held, on reference to a Full Bench, that the conviction was illegal, s. 6 of Act I of 1868, which provides that the repeal of any Act or Regulation shall not affect any offence committed before the repealing Act shall have come into operation, not being applicable. *EMPERESS v. The main purpose of the Official Trustees Act was to place the Official Trustee and his successors in office in the same position and vested with the same powers as the persons who held the property in trust previous to the appointment of the Official Trustee, and a wide meaning must be given to the words "property" and "vest." That "property" in the Official Trustees Act was meant also to include action or actionable claims, and the vesting thereof was intended to have the effect of giving the Official Trustee complete power of enforcing all claims or demands in respect of the trust estate. The plaintiff, as a creditor of S E E, had obtained letters of administration to his estate and now brought this suit for the recovery of Rs 2,000 on a mortgage which had been executed in favour of S E E. S E E in his lifetime was the trustee of a sum of Rs 70,000, and the Official Trustee, who had been appointed trustee in his place and who was made a defendant in this suit, claimed the benefit under the said mortgage on the allegation that the said sum had been advanced by S E E out of the trust funds. The plaintiff contended that she was entitled to the usual mortgage decree and to set in the money thereunder, and that the proper course for the rival claimants to the money represented by the plaintiff in her personal capacity on the one side and the Official Trustee on the other was then to proceed to establish their rights to the money by separate suit or otherwise. Held that the contention of the plaintiff was not correct, and the Court was bound to determine the question raised by the plaintiff representing the estate of the deceased and the Official Trustee representing the trust estate, and that the Official Trustee could adduce evidence in this suit to shew that the money was advanced out of the trust estate. *GABRIEL v. 3. ——— Suit for possession—Dispute as to whether transaction was a mortgage or sale—Entries in account books showing debts.—The plaintiffs sued for possession of certain lands, alleging that they had been mortgaged to the defendant by their father under two documents. The defendant produced them and relied upon them as deeds of sale which conveyed to him absolutely the lands mentioned in them. The form of the instruments was not conclusive, but it appeared aliunde by the conduct of the defendant himself that the deeds were intended as mere securities for money, and that he had treated them as such. Certain entries in the defendant's accounts also treated the respective considerations named in the deeds as continuing debts due to the defendant from the plaintiffs' father. Held that the entries, when put in evidence, were sufficient to shift the burden of proof from the plaintiffs to the defendant, and that it was incumbent on the latter to give either oral or documentary evidence which in some way neutralised or explained away their effect, or showed that they related to other transactions than those mentioned in the two documents. *GOVINDA v. 5. ATTACHMENT IN EXECUTION.

8. ——— Attachment of person of debtor—Execution of decree.—In an application for an order for execution of a decree by attachment of the person of the debtor, the onus is on the judgment-debtor to show that he has no means of satisfying the debt, and that he has not been guilty of any misconduct; and not on the creditor to show that, by sending the debtor to prison, some satisfaction of the debt would be obtained. *SETON v. 9. ——— Claim by judgment-debtors to property seized in execution of a decree against them as representatives of original debtors—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 234.—Where, in execution of a decree against the representatives of a deceased debtor, specific property was seized as the property of the deceased debtor and as being in the possession of his representatives and the judgment-debtors claimed the property so seized as their own,—Held, that the burden of proof lay on the decree-holder who asserted that the property seized in execution of his decree was the property of the deceased debtor and as such in the possession of the judgment-debtors. ABDUL RAHMAN v. MAHOMED AZIM [4 C. W. N., 151]

6. BAILMENTS.

10. ——— Negligence—Hiring—Accident—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 106—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 150, 151, 150.—The question of the burden of proof in cases of accidental injury to goods bailed depends upon the particular circumstances of each case. In some cases, from the nature of the accident, it lies upon the bailee to account for its occurrence, and thus to show that it has not been caused by his negligence. In such cases it is for him to give a prima facie explanation in order to shift the burden of proof to the person who seeks to make him liable. If he gives an explanation which is uncontradicted by reasonable evidence of negligence, and is not prima facie improbable, the Court is bound in law to find in his favour, and the mere happening of the accident is not sufficient proof of negligence. S hired a horse from W, and while it was in his custody it died from rupture of the diaphragm, which was proved to have been caused by over-exertion on a full stomach. In a suit by W against S to recover the value of the horse, the defendant gave evidence to the effect that

dence was not contradicted on any point, nor was any other evidence offered as to how the horse came to run away. There was evidence that the horse was a quiet one, that for some time previously it had done hardly any work, that it was fed immediately before it was let out for hire, and that rupture of the diaphragm was a likely result of the horse running away while its stomach was distended with food. The Court of first instance held that the defendant was bound to prove that he had taken such care of the horse as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances have taken of own property, that he must have used his whip freely, or done something else which caused the horse to bolt, and that in so doing he acted without reasonable care, and had thus caused the animal's death. The Court accordingly decreed the claim. Held by EDGE, C.J., that if the burden of proof was originally upon the defendant, it was shifted by the explanation which he gave, and which was neither contradicted nor prima facie improbable, and that the decree of the lower Court, being unsupported by any proof and based on speculation and assumption, was one which that Court had no jurisdiction to pass and should consequently be set aside in revision under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. Per BRODHURST, J. that as the decree was not only unsupported by proof but opposed to the evidence on the record, the lower Court had "acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally," within the meaning of s. 622. SHIELDS & WILKINSON. *L. 7 BOUNDARY

11 — Disputed boundary—Removal of boundary—Where a dispute arises regarding the direction of a boundary which one of the parties to a suit has demolished and the other party proves its general direction, the onus of proof that the direction is wrongly stated, if it be so lies on the former, who removed the boundary. JUDOOATH MULLICK & KALLER KISTO TAGORE

[25 W. R., 524]

12. — Failure of proof—Suit concerning the boundary line between contiguous mehals. The land in dispute (which, with the mehals adjacent, originally formed part of a permanently-settled zamindari, consisted of revenue paying mehals and of mehals alleged to be lakhsra all belonging to one proprietor) was so situated that it necessarily belonged either to Havelee, one of the latter or to the contiguous rent paying mehals. The Permanent Settlement did not define the boundary, nor was it fixed in subsequent resumption proceedings against Havelee, which ended in a temporary settlement of that mahal for twenty years. The ownership of Havelee having become severed from the ownership of the other mehals, the question of boundary arose, not as a question of revenue between the Government and a zamindar, but as one of title to land between the zamindars and proprietors of two contiguous and separate estates. The appellant having failed to prove that no part of the disputed land was included in the respondent's settlement (some portion at least being shown to belong to Havelee), and also having failed to prove by independent evidence his own right to recover the land specified in the plaint—Held that the suit should not have been determined upon that mere failure on his part to support the burden of proof cast upon him because the judgment would be as final and conclusive between the parties as an adjudication on the merits would be, and its effect would be to give something to the respondent which on the evidence belonged to the appellant's mehals. LEELANUND SINGH & MOHENDRO NARAIN SINGH

It is not conclusive evidence against such auction-purchaser, nor could any length of adverse holding prior to his purchase preclude the auction-purchaser from recovering it, if he could show clearly that it belonged to the mehal which he had purchased. *PRAN KISHEN BANERJEE v. 27 ——— Suit by a claimant to property under attachment—The defendant having attached certain property as belonging to his judgment debtor B, the plaintiff applied for the removal of the attachment, alleging that she had purchased the property from B prior to the defendant's decree. Her application was rejected and an order maintaining the attachment passed. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit to establish her right to the property in question. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. 33. ——— Suit for declaration of title—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 246—Equitable right.—Certain property belonging to one S was mortgaged by him in 1810 and 1813 to O, under form of conditional sale. S had three sons, H, A, and N, and in 1819 he sold the property included in the mortgages of 1810 and 1813 to his sons, H and A. In 1820 H and A entered into a fresh arrangement with O, who accepted from them a fresh mortgage of the property in lieu of those of 1810 and 1813, and of this mortgage in 1831 he obtained a decree for foreclosure. Subsequently, the Government resumed the property and settled it with O's widow as representing the proprietor, and the plaintiff afterwards purchased a one-third share of the estate. The defendant was the holder of a decree obtained in 1836 against the heirs of S on a money-debt of S, and in execution of that decree he, in 1866, caused the rights of N in the property to be attached and sold, and himself became the purchaser. On attachment, the plaintiff preferred a claim to it under s. 246, Act VIII of 1859, but it was disallowed. In a suit by the plaintiff praying for his right of ownership and possession, which was menaced by the defendant's decree and sale,—Held the onus was on the defendant to show that he had an equitable right which he could assert against the plaintiff. It was held in special appeal that the defendant was not debarred by that order or by the law of limitation from disputing the plaintiff's right to the goods, and that the plaintiffs were bound to prove their right to entitle themselves to a decree, and that the miscellaneous order was not conclusive proof of their right, and still less such an adjudication on the question as precluded a readjudication of it. It was for the desai to show, by evidence of the nature of the tenure of the vatan that it was impartible or to show, by evidence of family custom or of district, i. e., local custom that impartibility attached to it, such evidence being strong enough to rebut the presumption of the prevalence of the general Hindu law. ADRISHAPPA v GURUSHIDAPPA [I. 51. ——— Suit for declaration of title—Proof of title.—Where a plaintiff brings a suit for a declaration of his title as owner, he is bound to establish his title affirmatively. He is in the same position as any other plaintiff, and must make out his case, and the onus probandi that he is in possession as owner is upon him. RASSONADA RAYAR v. SITHARAMA PILLAI 2 Mad., 171

52. ——— Production of title-deeds.—The plaintiff sued for declaration of his title to property, of which the defendant was in possession, but of which she produced the title-deeds in favour of herself. Held the onus was on the defendant to disprove the plaintiff's title. SWARNAMAYI RAUE v. SRINIBASH KOYAL 6 B. L. R., 144

53. ——— Reversioner—Setting aside deed of sale.—In a suit for a declaration of plaintiff's reversionary title as heir to his late uncle's property, and for reversal of a deed of sale from that uncle set up by the defendant, the widow not having been made a party to the suit and her consent to or dissent from the alleged conveyance not having been ascertained, the issue tried was whether the deed was genuine, and whether defendant has possession under it. Held that the onus was rightly placed on the defendant. BYKUNT NATH ROY v. GREESH CHUNDER MOOKERJEE 15 W. R., 96

54. ——— Suit for confirmation of possession—Intervenor.—In a suit for confirmation of possession and declaration of title (the principal defendants admitting plaintiff's possession and title), in which a vendee from such defendants intervenes and claims the property on the allegation of being in possession,—Held that such vendee must prove possession before he could question the plaintiff's title. *LALLA RAM SUHAE SINGH v. 57. ——— Relationship between parties as showing bona fides of transaction.—The relationship between parties to a conveyance of property may be immaterial if the purchase is found true, but is not immaterial where the question to be decided is whether the purchase was true or fraudulent. The mere handing over of the purchase-money from one party to the other in the presence of strangers, and the registration of the deed, are not sufficient to prove the transaction to be bona fide. *PRAN KISHEN DEB v. 58. ——— Suit for possession and to have deeds declared fraudulent—Purchaser.—The plaintiff executed a deed of sale of a moiety and a lease of the other moiety of certain property to B. B instituted a suit under s. 15, Act XIV of 1859, which was dismissed. B then returned the deed of sale and lease to A, with the following endorsement under his signature: "Returned; no claim." A instituted the present suit for recovery or possession of the said property, and the defendant set up in his defence that he had no right to sue for a moiety of the property, as the same had been conveyed to B, and that the endorsement on the deed of sale was not admissible in evidence, as it had not been registered. Held that the onus was upon the defendant to prove his purchase. GIRISH CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHRY v. AMINA KHATUN [3 B. L. R., Ap., 125

59. ——— Suit to have deed cancelled as a forgery.—Under the special procedure provided in the Registration Act (III of 1877), the defendant, in whose favour a document was said to have been executed, succeeded in obtaining an order from the District Registrar for the registration of the same, although the plaintiff, who was alleged to have executed it, appeared before the Sub-Registrar, and subsequently before the Registrar, and denied executing it, and alleged it to be a forgery. 76. ——— Voluntary deed—Suit by settlor to set aside his deed.—One M (the original plaintiff) was priest in the family of the first and second defendants, and was treated with much kindness by the first defendant (N), upon whom he chiefly relied for advice in worldly matters. A sum of Rs30,000, which was the bulk of his property, was in deposit in the defendants' firm at interest. Early in 1887 he became ill, and in June 1887 he expressed a wish to execute a trust-deed and an English will. He gave instructions to N for the trust-deed. By this deed, which contained no power of revocation, he settled Rs30,000 upon the first and second defendants (who were uncle and nephew), as trustees to perform his funeral ceremonies and to carry out certain religious observances and to pay two annuities, each of Rs25, and with the residue to found a Sanskrit class. The deed provided for the payment during his lifetime, of a sum of Rs100 per mensem for his maintenance and expenses, or such larger sum as he might require for such purposes, but in other respects it was not to come into operation until after his death. The will of even date gave certain property to his wife, and subject to this bequest gave the residue of his property to his sister. After receiving instructions for these documents, N took them to an attorney. From these instructions drafts were prepared, which were read over to M in his room by the attorney's managing clerk. Neither drafts, nor instructions, nor the documents themselves were, however, left with M. The drafts were then engrossed, M having made some trifling corrections in them. On the 23rd June 1887 he attended at the house of the attorney. The documents were explained to him by the attorney, and were interpreted to him by a High Court interpreter. M was then examined by a medical man with a view to ascertain whether he was capable of understanding what he was doing. M then executed the trust-deed and the will, and both were then duly attested. At the same time M signed the accounts in the defendants' books, and the balance of the money, which stood to his credit over and above the Rs30,000 comprised in the deed, was produced and made over to him, and he made it over to N to be kept by him personally. Shortly after this, M's sister and her son came to Bombay, and he fell under their influence. He became dissatisfied with what he had done with the Rs30,000, and on the 21st November 1887 he executed a will by which he purported to remove the deed and the will of the 23rd June, and he left the whole of his property to his sister. On the 2nd September 1888 his nephew took him to Surat, and on the 14th September 1888 at Surat he executed a deed revoking the trust-deed of the 23rd June 1887. He also signed instructions and a power-of-attorney under which this suit was filed. He died subsequently to the filing of the suit, and his

90. ———— Proof of consideration—Promissory note—Suit by professional money-lender against a young man recently come of age—Presumption—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 118—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114, ill. (c).—Professional money lenders sued a young man recently come of age to recover certain loans of money alleged to have been advanced by them to him on promissory notes. The defendant, who under the will of his father was entitled to a large property but had not yet come into possession of it, was of an extravagant and reckless character. He pleaded, as to part of the consideration for the notes, that he did not receive it, and as to a further part, that the consideration was immoral. In dealing with the case the Court laid down the following propositions, not as rules of law, but as guides in considering the evidence in such a case: (1) That upon the above facts the ordinary presumption that a negotiable instrument has been executed for value received was so much weakened that the defendant's allegation that he had not received full consideration was sufficient to shift the burden of proof and to throw upon the money lenders (the plaintiffs) the obligation of satisfying the Court that they had paid the consideration in full. That is the practical effect of ill. (c) to s. 114 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872). (2) Where the plaintiff, in answer to such a defence, affirmed that he had paid the consideration in full, and was corroborated by his books and witnesses the onus of proof again shifted over upon the defendant. (3) The burden of proof thus thrown upon the defendant could only be met by a perfectly truthful and harmonious statement which the Court felt able to rely upon with confidence. In the absence of this the ordinary presumption laid down in s 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) must prevail, i.e., that until the contrary is proved the presumption should be made that every negotiable instrument was made for consideration. MOTI GU LACHAND v. 91. — Proof of consideration for a registered mortgage—Income-tax returns—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss 76 and 77—The defendant in a suit for money secured by registered mortgage to be paid by him to the plaintiff denied the consideration of which he had, before the registering officer, acknowledged the receipt. The original Court, which dismissed the suit, would not have decided in favour of the defendant but for its having been shown on an inspection of copies, officially certified, of income tax returns made by the plaintiff that he had not stated the interest accruing on the mortgage as part of his income. This judgment was reversed in appeal. The Judicial Commissioner was of opinion that the certified copies should not have been admitted in evidence, in reference to ss 76 and 77 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), and also that, assuming the false statement of income to have been made, it still remained unproved by the defendant that the acknowledged consideration had not been paid. The judgment of the Appellate Court was affirmed by their Lordships, who concurred in the opinion that the returns if the plaintiff had wrongly omitted to make a full return of income, would not have had any weight in changing the onus which lay upon the defendant of showing that no consideration had passed for this mortgage. ALI KHAN BAHADUR v. 98. ——— Non-receipt of full consideration—Suit on bond.—In a suit for money due on a bond between the representatives of the original parties to it, the defendant attempted to reduce the claim on the ground that the money had not been received in full, the bond having been given partly in respect of an old debt, and partly in respect of a credit, in account, upon which the debtor had not, in fact, drawn certain items. The Judicial Committee concurred with the High Court, which had reversed so much of the decree of the Court of first instance as disallowed these items; the latter Court not having correctly adjusted the burden of proof, and having acted as if the plaintiff had relied on his own books to prove the debt, besides having erred in weighing the evidence. RAJESWARI KUAR v. 99. ——— Judge's duty to decide secundum allegata et probata.—The plaintiffs sued upon two bonds executed by the defendant in their father's favour, one for Rs200 and the other for Rs99-15 annas. The defendant in his written statement, as well as in his deposition, admitted execution of the bonds in question, but pleaded non-receipt of consideration. The Subordinate Judge held that the bond for Rs200 was not proved, but awarded the claim upon the other bond. On appeal, one of the issues raised by the Assistant Judge was—are the bonds in suit proved? He held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove execution of the bonds, and dismissed the claim in toto. Held, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that the defendant having admitted execution of the bonds in question, the Assistant Judge acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction in raising the question of the execution. The first rule of adjudication is that a Judge shall decide secundum allegata et probata. The only question that could be tried in the present case was non-receipt of consideration. GORAKH BABAJI v. 102. ——— Bond in favour of one undivided brother for the benefit of himself and others—Suit by promise alone—Payment to younger undivided brother—Discharge.—In a suit on a bond executed by the deceased father of defendants, in favour of the plaintiff, the defendants, while admitting the bond and the consideration for which it had been given, contended that, inasmuch as plaintiff had four undivided brothers and the deed had been executed in his name for the benefit of himself and his brothers, the latter should have been joined as plaintiffs, and that plaintiff could not maintain the suit alone. They also pleaded payment to plaintiff's undivided younger brother, which payment, they contended, was binding on the plaintiff. Held that plaintiff was entitled to sue for the family debt without joining his undivided brothers, the contract on which the suit was based being in plaintiff's sole name and not purporting to have been obtained on behalf of any others but himself. And that, as to the payment pleaded, if true, plaintiff was, as regards the promisor, the only person prima facie entitled to payment; it therefore lay on the promisor to show that a payment to a third party was binding on the plaintiff, which had not been done. The contention that payment to any member of the family was by itself necessarily binding on the member who took the contract, could not be supported. ADAIKKALAM CHETTI v. MARIMUTHU . I. L. 103. ——— Bond in favour of one co-sharer—Payment of such bond made to another co-sharer when a discharge.—Where a debt due to one member of a joint family has been paid by the debtor to another member of the family, the question whether such payment operates as a discharge depends on the circumstances under which it was made. A and B. were members of joint Hindu family. Both managed the joint property for the common benefit. Each used to recover debts due on bonds taken in the other's name. In 1890 defendant passed a bond to A. In 1892 he passed a mortgage bond to B, the consideration for which was stated to be the balance due on the former bond. Subsequently A sued defendant on the bond of 1890. Held that under the circumstances the mortgage bond passed to B operated as a valid discharge of A's claim under the previous bond. GRUSHAN TAPPA v. 113. ———— Suit for ejectment—Limitation Act, 1859, s. 15.—The law obtaining in India requires that in actions of ejectment the Courts should always enforce the rule that a plaintiff must recover by the strength of his own title; and a party who might have shifted the burden of proof, if he had proceeded under s. 15 of Act XIV of 1859, cannot, if he let slip that opportunity, obtain the same advantage in an action of ejectment. *DADABHAI NARSDAS v. 115. ———— Defence of right of permanent occupancy—Defence of special character.—In suits by the trustee of a temple to recover possession of certain lands with mesne profits, defendants set up in defence that they were absolute owners of the land in question, or, at least, were entitled to rights of permanent occupancy. In support of the latter contention, they relied, inter alia, upon certain pymash documents, which contained the word ulavadai, the use of which term, they contended, established the alleged right of permanent occupancy. Held (1) that, where the occupier of land resists a suit for ejectment by setting up a claim of a right of permanent occupancy, the onus of establishing such a right lies on the defendant, inasmuch as by it he seeks to derogate from the ordinary incidents of property; and (2) that the right expressed by the term ulavadai (which means an act or right of ploughing or cultivating lands) cannot be assumed to be a permanent right. *RANGASAMI REDDI v. 1878, leaving a widow B. The year before his death his only son (Bala), a child of eight years old, had left his home and was never heard of again. A few days before his death, S adopted the plaintiff (his nephew) and executed a deed of adoption, which stated that he had no hope that his son Bala was alive, and that he had therefore adopted the plaintiff. The deed further declared the plaintiff to be the owner of all S's property with all the rights of a natural son, but provided that, in the event of the lost son returning, he should have half. In 1892 the plaintiff, as S's adopted son, brought this suit to recover some of S's property, which was in the hands of the defendants, who claimed it as S's heirs. They (inter alia) impeached the plaintiff's adoption. Held that, in order to recover the property as the adopted son of S, it lay on the plaintiff to prove a valid adoption. It was a condition precedent to prove that at the date of the adoption S was without a son. It was therefore for the plaintiff to prove that Bala was then dead. There was at that time no presumption that Bala was dead, and, there being no evidence on the point, it was impossible to say when he died, or consequently that the adoption was valid. Held, however, that plaintiff was entitled to succeed as donee under the deed of adoption. It was clearly S's intention to give the estate to the plaintiff as being his adopted son. But if the adoption was invalid, the gift had no effect. The onus here was on the defendants. It was for them to show that Bala was at that date alive and the adoption therefore invalid. That burden they had not discharged, and the plaintiff therefore was entitled to a decree. Per FARRAN, C.J.—Where a deed of gift or will confers an estate upon a named person, because he fills or by reason of his filling a certain character, he is entitled to recover the estate without affirmatively proving that he fills such character. The onus of proving that he does not fill the character, which is the reason of the gift, lies upon those who dispute his claim. The whole question is one of onus of proof. *RANGO BALAJI v. 153. ——— Suit to enforce the mortgage against son's shares.—Joint Hindu family—Mortgage by father—Legal necessity—Burden of proof.—As a general rule, a creditor endeavouring to enforce his claim under a hypothecation-bond given by a Hindu father against the estate of a joint Hindu family in respect of money lent or advanced to the father having only a limited interest, should, if the question is raised, prove either that the money was obtained by the father for a legal necessity, or that he made such reasonable inquiries as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt, or for the other legal necessities of the family. There is a distinction between such cases as this and cases in which a decree has been obtained against the father and the property sold, or cases in which the sons come into Court to ask for relief against a sale effected by their father for an antecedent debt. Where a decree was obtained against the father and a sale effected, the presumption is that the decree was properly made. Where a son comes into Court to ask for relief against a sale effected by his father for an antecedent debt, it is for the son to make out a case for the relief asked for. In a suit against the members of a joint Hindu family upon a bond given by their father and in which family property was hypothecated no evidence was given on either side as to the circumstances in which the bond was given. There was no evidence to show that any inquiry had been made by the plaintiff as to the objects for which the bond was executed by the father. Held that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show either that the money was obtained for a legal necessity, or that he had made reasonable inquiries and obtained such information as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt or for the other legal necessities of the family, and that, no evidence having been given, the suit must be dismissed. *JAMNA v. The plaintiff, widow of the only son who survived his father, who was the owner of village lands and other property, had become, on her husband's death without issue, entitled as the widow, to the estate which he had inherited. But she obtained possession of only half of it. The other half was in the recorded possession, when this suit was brought, of the widow of her late husband's younger brother, who died in his father's lifetime. The case which the latter widow, as defendant, now sought to make was that she had become entitled to a share in the estate as the result of a series of transactions, by way of family arrangement, in which the two widows, and their mother in law, widow of the deceased father, had taken part. These included a reference to arbitration, a release, and dakhil kharj in settlement records. Held that the plaintiff must succeed, in the absence of proof of which the burden was on the defendant, that the plaintiff, when ceding half of the estate to which she was entitled, had knowledge of her right, as widow, to the whole, and had freely made what in effect was a gift. DEO KUAR v. It was not shown that the debts secured by either of these two deeds were debts entered into with the consent of all the husband's kindred under circumstances which might raise a valid presumption that the debts secured by them were properly incurred. It was further not shown that the power of attorney under which L purported to act in executing the bond of 1877 on behalf of H, A, and I was ever properly explained to the professed executants or that they understood its import, nor was it shown that either of the bonds was duly explained to and comprehended by the professed executants other than L himself, in manner required by law in the case of documents executed by pardanashin women, nor, though at the date of the execution of the second bond I had attained the age of majority, did it appear that he signed the bond with any clear knowledge of its contents or of the liability which he was professing to incur thereby, or otherwise than through the influence brought to bear on him by his father L. Held, on suit by the mortgagees to bring to sale the ancestral property which had been of K in his lifetime in enforcement of the two mortgages above-mentioned, that the mortgages were not binding on the alleged executants or on the ancestral property at the date of suit in the hands of A. I's interest in the family property in suit could only be affected by the mortgage of the 2nd of April 1881 on proof that the debt was in fact one, or was on reasonable inquiry by and statements made to, the lenders of the money believed by them to be one, in respect of which his mother A, as a Hindu daughter in possession, could mortgage or charge the family property beyond her own then vested interest in it, or on proof that he, as one of the reversioners by joining with his

It is also necessary when money-lenders in this country seek to enforce against the property of a Hindu family a contract of mortgage made by a reversioner, who, although of age at the time, was then still of tender years and without experience of business, for the Court, when the question is raised, to be satisfied that the reversioner understood the nature of the transaction and the effect of the contract which he was entering into, or that the reversioner of the family property, in which the reversioner had an estate in expectancy only, was liable for the debt in respect of which the mortgage is sought to be enforced, and that no unfair advantage was taken of the reversioner's youth and inexperience. *ACHHAN KUAR v. 177 ——— Alienation by widow—Proof that money on mortgage was advanced for purpose justified by legal necessity—Evidence of sufficiency of husband's estate to maintain widow—A Hindu proprietor's heirs in possession after the death of his widow who had mortgaged part of the inheritance, were sued by the mortgagee's heir, who represented him to enforce the mortgage as binding on the land. There was evidence that after the mortgage was executed, previous mortgages made by the widow were paid off with the borrowed money, but there was no evidence connecting any of those securities with a debt of the husband, or that the mortgage was made for a legitimate purpose. Held that, although the suit was brought by the representative and not by the original mortgagee the burden of proving the money to have been advanced to the widow for a purpose justified by legal necessity was on the plaintiff, and that it was incumbent on him to adduce sufficient evidence of the nature of the transaction. That general evidence to the effect that the husband died in debt, and that the widow substituted new securities at reduced interest for former mortgages, was not sufficient to exempt the plaintiff from having to prove the particulars of the transaction and its justification. That the burden of proving that the estate left by the husband was sufficient to maintain the widow was not thrown upon the defendants. Hannoman Pershad Pandey v. 179. — Alienation by manager of infant's estate — Presumption of bonâ fides — Obligation of purchaser to inquire — Necessity for charge.—Under the Hindu law, the right of a bonâ fide incumbrancer who has taken from a de facto manager a charge on lands created honestly, for the purpose of saving the estate, or for the benefit of the estate, is not (provided the circumstances would support the charge) had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager affected by the want of union of the de facto with the de jure title. The question as to the onus of proof in such cases is one not capable of a general and inflexible answer, but the presumption proper to be made will vary with circumstances. Thus, a mortgagor, who is setting up a charge in his favour made by one whose title to alienate he knew to be limited, must prove the facts which embody the representations made to him of the alleged deeds of the estate and the motives influencing his immediate loan; but such proof must not be required from one not an original party, after a lapse of time and enjoyment and apparent acquiescence. Where, also, a charge is created by the substitution of a new security for an older one, and the consideration for the older one was an old precedent debt of an ancestor not previously questioned, the presumption will arise in favour of a consideration that binds the estate. The lender is bound to inquire into the necessity for the charge, and to satisfy himself that the manager is acting for the benefit of the estate. But if he does so inquire and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge, and he is not bound to see to the application of the money. *HUNOOMAN PERSHAD PANDEY v. the purchase not only to show that, under the circumstances of the case, either the guardian had the power to sell or that the purchaser reasonably supposed he had such power, but, further, that the whole transaction, so far as regarded the purchaser's part in it, was bonâ fide. Following the principle laid down by the Court in the case of Kannal Jochari v. Kaniare Dilee, 1 B. L. R., O. The burden of proof in such a case would lie heavily on the person seeking to set aside the alienation. first defendant to obtain possession of some portions of land alleged to fall within the share of the zamindari so purchased defendants contended that the plots which were the subject of suit, although falling within the ambit of the zamindari did not in fact form a portion of it but were lakhiraj lands belonging to themselves by a title independent of the title to the zamindari. The evidence showed the principal defendant to have been in receipt of the rents and profits of the land in suit, as well as of his share of the zamindari. Held that the onus lay upon the defendants to show the alleged independent title, failing to do so, the prima facie title made out by the plaintiff ought to prevail. SUDH DAN ALI v. 209 Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1852), s 106, 108 Transferability of tenancy—Suit by zamindar to set aside a Court sale of his raiyat's interest—A zamindar raiyat mortgaged the land comprised in his holding, and the mortgagee having sued and obtained a decree on his mortgage attached the mortgagor's interest in the land and purchased it at the Court sale held in execution of his decree. The zamindar, who had intervened unsuccessfully in execution, now sued to set aside the sale and to eject the decree holder and the judgment debtor from the land. Neither party adduced evidence. Held that there was no presumption that the tenant was a tenant at will or was there a presumption that the tenancy was not transferable—such presumptions being contrary to ss 106 and 108 of the Transfer of Property Act respectively. The burden of proof therefore lay on the plaintiff and had not been discharged, and the suit must consequently be dismissed. APPA RAO v. SUBBAYYA I L R, 13 Mad, 80

241. ——— Rate of rent, Proof of—Evidence that rent stated in lease has been realized.—The mere fact that a tenant some time ago gave a kabuliya for a limited period at a particular rate of rent is not sufficient in itself to throw upon the defendant the entire burden of proving what the present rent is, without any evidence on the part of the landlord that the rent specified in the kabuliya had ever been realized from him. MO-KUNDA CHANDRA SARMA v. ARPAN ALI SHEIKH
[2 C. W. N., 47]

242. ——— Shifting of onus—Claim for rent—Written receipts, if necessary proofs of payment—Written receipts, if primary evidence.—Written receipts for payments are important, but by no means necessary as proof; nor are they of the nature of primary evidence, the loss of which must be shown in order to let in secondary. On the evidence in the case it was held that, though the case is a most obscure and of an unsatisfactory character, and that, although the plaintiff had given good reasons for holding that such part of the defendant's case as related to the missing receipts was not worthy of belief, yet that the defendant did give evidence of payment of the rent claimed, sufficient to throw back again on the plaintiff the onus of proving that the rent was still due. Plaintiff's evidence was silent on the crucial point of payment, her Dewan kept out of the way of examination, and no sufficient grounds had been assigned for reversing the decrees of the High Court. RAMOSWAR KOER v. Held that the lower Appellate Court was wrong, that the defendant, having pleaded payment was bound to prove that the admitted payments were in respect of that portion of the year 1283 for which the arrears were claimed. S 12 of the Rent Law applies to receipts given directly by the landlord to the tenant and not to receipts given to third persons. SIRFUV v RUDDER SOHAY [1 L R, 7 Cal, 582]

272. ————— Limitation—Settlement.—In a suit for possession, where defendant denies plaintiff's title and sets up a defence involving the plea of limitation, the question of limitation does not depend upon whether defendant was in possession, but upon whether plaintiff was in possession. Where defendant admitted that the permanent settlement was ordered to be made with the party in possession, and that it was made within twelve years prior to the suit with the party from whom plaintiff claimed,—Held that, until the contrary was shown, that party was rightly presumed to be in possession, and plaintiff's claim was not barred by limitation. *MAHOMED KOBBER v. 275. ————— Disposition—Presumption—Onus probandi—Limitation—Joint owners, Adverse possession between.—Under the former Limitation Act the cause of action, and under the present law the event from which limitation is declared to run, must have occurred within the prescribed period, and it lies on the plaintiff to show this. Accordingly, where the suit is for possession and the cause of action is dispossession, the plaintiff is bound to prove possession and dispossession within twelve years. Possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user. When land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes, at such a time and under such circumstances that that state naturally would, and probably did, continue till within twelve years before suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue, and that the previous possession continued also until the contrary is proved. Such a presumption is in no sense a conclusive one. Its bearing upon each particular case must depend upon the circumstances of that case. Many acts which would be clearly adverse, and might amount to dispossession as between a stranger and the true owner of land, would, between joint owners, naturally bear a different construction. *MAHOMED ALI KHAN v. The principle does not apply where the evidence of possession is equally unworthy of reliance on both sides. Dharm Sing v. Hurpershad Sing, I. L. R., 12 Calc., 38, explained. Possession, however, is not necessarily the same as actual user. When therefore the plaintiff has to prove possession of land in dispute within the statutory period of limitation, if there is anything special in the character of the land, for example, when it is permanently or temporarily incapable of actual enjoyment in any one of the customary modes, a presumption in favour of continuance of possession, though in no sense a conclusive one, may arise. *Mahomed Ali Khan v. As a general rule, a plaintiff must not only show he has a title, but that he has a subsisting title, which he has not lost by the prescriptive section of the Limitation Act. The probable explanation of the ruling in Radha Gobind Roy's case, 7 C. L. R., 364, is that, when a plaintiff proves title and possession, it is to be presumed that his possession continues till the defendant proves that the possession was interrupted, but that, where the plaintiff can prove title only, and not possession, he must prove that the adverse possession of the defendant, or the acts of which he complains as impugning his title, occurred within the period prescribed by the Limitation Act. *SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. 290. ————— Waste land subsequently made cultivable—Presumption—Constructive possession.—The doctrine of constructive possession applies only in favour of a rightful owner, and must not, as a rule, be extended in favour of a wrong-doer, whose possession must be confined to land of which he is actually in possession. In a suit for the possession of lands formerly uncultivable, but subsequently brought under cultivation, the District Judge had allowed the plea of limitation to prevail against the plaintiff upon a finding—based, not upon evidence of actual possession by the defendants, but upon an inference from part of the evidence—that the defendants had been in constructive possession for over twelve years prior to the suit. Held that, so far as the judgment and decree of the District Judge related to certain plots described as patit or uncultivable lands, they must be set aside, and the case remanded to the District Judge to determine (a) how far the presumption in favour of the plaintiff as to the continuance of the uncultivable state of the lands till within twelve years of suit applied; and (b) how far that presumption had been rebutted by evidence of actual possession on the part of the defendants. *MOHINI MOHAN ROY v. session of alluvial land—Evidence of possession in absence of landmarks.—The plaintiff sued to recover a tract of chur land as parcel of his mouzah of J, the defendant alleging the said land to be a parcel of his mouzah of G. About the year 1830, a large tract of land was delineated by the River Chutul within the mouzahs belonging respectively to the plaintiff and defendant and after reformation in 1837 a proceeding was taken by the plaintiff before the Magistrate under which he was ordered to be put in possession of a considerable tract of such newly-formed land, the Magistrate laying down the boundaries. After nearly twelve years (i.e., in 1849), the defendant's father brought a civil suit to set aside the Magistrate's decision, and the ultimate finding was that the plaintiff had been in possession of the land described in the Magistrate's order from and since the date of that order. Held that that decree must be taken to have established that the plaintiff was in possession of the land described in the Magistrate's order, and had continued in such possession, the question in the present suit being whether the lands now claimed are identical with those so described. Held also that the onus of proving that issue lay upon the plaintiff, because the foundation of his suit was that, having been in possession, he was dispossessed as a consequence of certain measurements made by Government officers. Held further that plaintiff had failed to sustain the burden of proof. He relied principally on the boundaries given by the Magistrate and certain maps prepared then and later as compared with the Government map of 1853; but their Lordships were unable to

300. ————— Right to alluvial land—Change in course of river—Boundaries.—Disputed settlement.—At the permanent settlement the River Gunduck divided mouzah Sohagpore (zillah Tirhoot) from the village of Dumri (zillah Sarun). In 1837 the river got into its southern channel, and a quantity of chur land to the north was resumed by Government and settled with the zamindars of Sohagpore. In 1846 it was again settled with the same zamindars, who remained in possession until 1848, when the river having returned to its northern channel the deara land was claimed by proprietors on the southern or Sarun side of the river: the consequence was an Act IV of 1840 suit which was decided in favour of the zamindars of Sohagpore. In 1856, on the expiry of the last temporary settlement, the question arose with whom Government should engage for the revenue, and it was finally decided by the Board of Revenue that a settlement should be made with the zamindars of Dumri, who accordingly obtained possession. The Board's decision proceeded on two principles,—viz., that a usage existed that the main channel of the Gunduck should be the boundary of the zamindari, and that therefore the interest of the zamindars of Sohagpore had been of a limited, temporary, and conditional character. These zamindars then brought a suit to impeach this settlement and to recover possession. After decision, appeal, and remand, it was finally decided by the High Court that the land in dispute was identical with that formerly settled with the maliks of Sohagpore, who (it was assumed) had a permanent proprietary interest therein. Held that the proper issues to be tried were: first, whether the land had been settled in 1837 with the maliks of Sohagpore as proprietors of alluviums which had gradually accreted to their estate, or upon what other grounds such settlement was made, the onus of proving gradual accretion being on the plaintiffs; and, secondly, whether there was at the permanent settlement, and has been since, a clear and definite usage such as supposed by the Board of Revenue, the burden of proving the affirmative of this being on the defendant. RAJENDUR PERTAB SAHAI v. up to the time of diluviation, and alleged that the lands had reformed within twelve years, without alleging or proving possession during that period. The defendants, on the other hand, alleged that the reformation had taken place more than twelve years before suit, and that they had acquired a title to the lands by adverse possession for that period. Held that in such a case the submergence of the lands after diluvion ought to be presumed until the contrary was shown, and that the onus of proving reformation before twelve years and adverse possession was shifted to the defendants. Per Wilson, J.—As a general rule, where a plaintiff claims land from which he alleges he has been dispossessed, the burden is upon him to show possession and dispossession within twelve years. Proof of possession within twelve years does not necessarily mean proof of acts of ownership within that time. The nature of the proof of possession must depend on the nature of the case. There are many cases in which the party on whom the burden of proof in the first instance lies may shift the burden to the other side by proving facts giving rise to a presumption in his favour. In the case of lands gradually diluviated and gradually reformed, if the diluviation has been more than twelve years before suit, the claimant, unless he can show possession since the reformation, must at least show that he was in possession down to the date of the diluvion. Where the reformation is proved to have taken place within twelve years, the burden is shifted to the defendant to show that he was not in possession at the time of the diluvion. In the present case, the plaintiffs failed to show possession within twelve years, and the defendants failed to show that the plaintiffs were not in possession at the time of the diluvion. Held in favour of the defendants.

the property in dispute is capable of actual or visible possession, yet, in the case of property which is not susceptible of actual and visible possession, an exception to the nature of the thing must be made to the general rule. In such cases, when the title and possession have been proved to be in a certain person up to a certain point of time,—when there has possession of the person having the title will be presumed to continue until the property has again become susceptible of actual visible possession. Proof of possession is presumptive proof of ownership, because men generally own the property which they possess. And if the ownership of property is proved, and there is nothing to show that the possession of such property is with any person other than the owner, it may fairly be presumed to be with the owner. Such a presumption then takes the place of evidence to show the plaintiff's possession, within twelve years before suit, of a property in which, from the nature of the thing, evidence of actual possession is impossible. MANO MOHUN OHSE v. II, arts. 142, 144—Boundaries, Dispute as to—Ownership of land reclaimed from a bhil contested between proprietors of contiguous estates—Prior possession of land by one of two claimants—Presumption as to continuance of possession of land by original owner, limitation being pleaded by party in possession.*—In suits relating to disputed boundaries where the decision of the lower Court as to the ownership involves questions of the correctness of surveys, maps, recorded description, and other such evidence, the appellant should do more than show points requiring explanation. He should be prepared to show in what respect the decision has been wrong in regard to the evidence, and what other course would be right. The question was as to the ownership of land reclaimed from a bhil within the confines of one or other of two adjoining revenue mehals, the one belonging to the plaintiff, the other to the defendants, and involved the identification of the land in suit with some that had been covered with water, but of which the plaintiff's possession, with title, had been affirmed in proceedings of the revenue survey in 1857. In consequence of the nature and condition of the land, there was no evidence of any act of possession done by either party during the first two years of the twelve immediately preceding the date of the institution of the suit, and during the last ten years the defendants had been in possession. The latter, having tried and failed to establish adverse possession in themselves, contended that, even if the plaintiff's possession had been shown to have existed in 1857, he could not succeed without his showing that his possession remained till later than the 9th April 1869, the suit having been filed on 9th April 1881, or unless he proved some act of dispossession by the defendants within that period. Held that the presumption was in favour of the plaintiff's possession, which had been with apparent title, having in fact continued over the two years in question, as to which continuance there was no evidence to the contrary. If the burden was on the plaintiff to show possession down to within twelve years of suit, it had been discharged. RAJKUMAR ROY v. GOBIND CHUNDER ROY

31. MORTGAGE.

321. ——— Suit for redemption of mortgage—Alleged sale.—In a suit for redemption of property which, the plaintiff alleges to be mortgaged, but which the defendant contends was sold absolutely, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove the mortgage; and the existence of a mortgage cannot be presumed from the failure of the defendant to establish the alleged sale. BALAJI NARJI v. BABU DEOLI
[5 Bom., A. C., 159

322. ——— Evidence Act, I of 1872, s. 110.—The plaintiff sued to redeem certain land, alleging that it had been mortgaged by his father to the defendant in 1854-55. The defendant denied the mortgage, and alleged that he purchased it under a deed of sale from the plaintiff's father in 1849, and had ever since been in his possession as owner. The deed of conveyance was not forthcoming, nor was the alleged mortgage-deed. The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the mortgage was not proved. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court of first instance. The defendant appealed. Held that the defendant's possession was prima facie evidence of a complete title, and that the plaintiff, who alleged that the defendant was merely a mortgagee, was bound to prove his own right as mortgagor, clearly and indefeasibly. Mere statements that the property had been mortgaged, which failed to establish any particular mortgage, did not shift the burden of proof, or require the mortgagee to show what were the terms of such mortgage, or his right to retain possession under it. RAMCHANDRA APAJI v. BALAJI BHABRAV

323. ——— Lost mortgage-deed.—In a suit for redemption, the mortgage-deed, dated 21st July 1840, having been lost, the Judicial Commissioner held that the onus lay, not upon the mortgagor to prove that the term did not expire before 13th of February 1856, but upon the mortgagee to prove that it did. Held by the Privy Council that the burden of proof was prima facie on the mortgagor, regard being had, as respects the quantum of evidence required, to the opportunities which each party might naturally be supposed to have of giving evidence. KISHEN DUTT RAM PANDEY v. The mortgage-money was payable on the 28th September 1806. If not paid, the property was to vest absolutely in the mortgagee without foreclosure. The defendant admitted that he had not foreclosed, but stated that Regulation XVII of 1806 was promulgated in Sarun on the 7th January 1807, and consequently that the money became due before the Regulation was promulgated. Held the onus was on the plaintiff to prove that the Regulation was promulgated before 28th September 1806. SARIFUNNISSA v. 326. ——— Profits.—In a suit for redemption, on the ground that the debt has been satisfied with interest, the onus is on the plaintiff. A mortgagee is not an assurer of the continuation of the same rate of profits as his mortgagor was able to raise. Hence an estimate of the rental preceding the mortgagor's possession is not sufficient proof of the profits in his time. SHAH MAKHANLAL v. SER-KRISHNA SINGH

The defendants, admitting the proprietary title of the ancestor of the plaintiffs to the villages, alleged as to 10 biswas of each village that they were sold to their ancestors in 1842 by him for Rs. 1,250, and as to the other 10 biswas of each village, that they were subsequently mortgaged to their ancestors by him for Rs. 14,000, borrowed by him from them for the purpose of defending a suit arising out of the previous sale, which sum had not been satisfied from the usufruct. Held (STUART, C.J., dissenting) that the burden of proving the mortgage of the 10 biswas of each village of which the defendants alleged the sale lay on the plaintiffs. Per STUART, C.J., contra. RATAN KUAR v. 387. ————— Right to begin—Adoption, Proof of—Proof of loss, and admission of secondary evidence, of a document alleged to have been executed—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 65.—A suit for possession by right of inheritance was brought by a claimant, alleging himself to be the heir, against the alleged adopted son of the last male owner, denying that an adoption purporting to be made by the widow had been duly authorized by the deceased. The Court of first instance called upon the defendant to prove his title as a son by adoption, notwithstanding that the plaintiff was out of possession, and could not have succeeded, in the event of the defendant's failure to prove it, without first proving his own title as collateral heir by descent: thus in effect, proposing to make the establishment of the plaintiff's title depend upon the failure or success of the defendant in proving the adoption. The High Court pointed out the error of this proceeding, and the Judicial Committee affirmed its judgment, concurring also in its finding that the adoption had been proved. It was found also that the loss of the anumati-patra had been established, so that secondary evidence of it was receivable. *KALI KISHORE DUTT GUPTA MOZUMDAR v. 388. ————— Presumption of ownership—Possession—Suit for ejectment—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 110.—It is usually for the plaintiff who seeks ejectment to prove his title. But where he proves himself to have peaceably enjoyed possession for a considerable time, the person who has recently dispossessed him has to meet the presumption of law that the plaintiff's possession indicates his ownership. In a suit for possession of immoveable property and other reliefs, it was proved that the plaintiff and his predecessors in title had been in undisturbed possession for thirty or forty years previous to his dispossession by the defendant. The defendant alleged, but failed to prove, that the plaintiff had paid him rent as tenant-at-will of the premises. The lower Appellate Court, upon the finding that the plaintiff's possession was that of a licensee, modified the first Court's decree, which had allowed the claim in full. Held (by MAHMOOD, J.) with reference to s. 110 of the Evidence Act that, although in the first instance the burden of proving his title was on the plaintiff, it was shifted by his proving long undisturbed possession; that the defendant's failure to prove the alleged payment of rent went far to prove that the plaintiff's possession was adverse; and that the Court below, in acting upon the theory that such possession was that of a licensee, had wrongly set up for the defendant a defence which he had not set up for himself. *LACHHO' v. 392. ————— Purchase money—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 106.—In a suit to enforce the right of pre-emption, in which the plaintiff impugns the correctness of the price stated in the instrument of sale, although the burden of proof prima facie is on him to show that the property has in fact been sold below the stated price, yet very slight evidence is ordinarily sufficient to establish his case; and when such case is established, it rests upon the defendants, the vendor and vendee, to prove by cogent evidence that the stated price is the correct one. The principle laid down by the Privy Council in Kishen Dutt Ram Panday v. Narendar Bahadoor Singh, L. R., 3 I. A., 85, applied. *Mahomed Noorul Hossein v. Hyder Buksh, W. In determining the amount of the price which a pre-emptor has to pay, the Court is not called upon to assess the amount which would be a fair and reasonable price for the property, but to ascertain what amount actually changed hands as consideration for the sale. *TAWKKUL RAI v. price stated in the deed of sale to be fictitious must give some prima facie evidence leading to the presumption that the price so stated was not the true price. Having done that, it then lies upon the vendor and vendee to give such an explanation by evidence as will go to rebut the presumption raised by the plaintiff's evidence. In the majority of cases the only prima facie evidence which the plaintiff pre-emptor could produce would be either evidence showing that the vendor or the vendee had made an admission that the price was fictitious or else evidence showing that the market value of the property was so much less than the alleged price as would lead any reasonable man to come to the conclusion that the alleged price was not the real price. Where the price stated in the deed of sale was nearly five times the market value of the property sold and the purchaser gave no explanation showing why he was willing to buy the property at a price apparently so extravagant—Held that there was sufficient evidence upon which to find that the price alleged in the contract was fictitious. Bhagwan Singh v Mahabir Singh, I L R 5 All, 184 followed. SHEOPAROSH DUBE v DHANRAJ DUBE I L R, 9 All, 225

405. ————— Declaration of lakhiraj title—Assessment of rent.—In a suit instituted in 1877, A prayed for a declaration that he had a lakhiraj title to certain lands, the defendant stated that; the lands, for a declaration of a title to which A now sued, formed part of certain lands which had been the subject of resumption proceedings, which were terminated in 1863 by a decree declaring that the lands which were the subject of that suit, including the lands now claimed by A, were not lakhiraj. It being found as a fact that A had neither been a party to, nor been represented in, the resumption proceedings; that he had been in quiet and undisturbed possession of the lands which he now claimed for more than twelve years before the institution of his suit; and that proceedings had been taken by the defendant calculated to disturb such possession,—Held that, although the onus of proof lay on the plaintiff, it was not necessary for him to prove that the lands claimed by him to be held as lakhiraj had been held rent-free from before the date of the permanent settlement; but it was sufficient for him to prove that the defendant was, at the time of the institution of the suit, debarred by lapse of time from instituting a suit for the resumption or assessment of rent upon the land. *ABHOY CHURN PAL v. Rent free lands —Landlord and tenant—In suits for the resumption of lands alleged by the defendant to be lakhuraj, the burden of proof is in the first instance on the plaintiff to show that the lands are mal. The fact that the defendant is a tenant of the plaintiff is a matter to be taken into consideration by the Court in determining whether on the facts of the case, the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, but unless the Court finds that the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, judgment should be given for the defendant Harihar Mukhopadhyay v Madhab Chandra Babu, 8 B L R, 566 14 Moore's I A, 153, Akbar Ali v Bhyea Lall Jha I L R, 6 Calc, 666 and Newaj Bundopadhyay v Kali Prasunno Ghose I L R 6 Calc 543, cited. BACHA RAM MUNDUL v PEARY MOHUN BANERJEE

416. ————— Lakhiraj land
—Beng. Reg. XLI of 1795, s. 10.—Where certain land apparently lakhiraj was represented in village papers as part of māl land, and included within the boundary of the revenue-paying mehal,—Held, on the zamindar's suit for assessment of the land, that the onus of showing that the case is within s. 10, Regulation XLI of 1795, lay on the zamindar. The inclusion of the land in the boundary is not conclusive evidence, nor is it binding when the boundary has not been made judicially. The landlord proving it to be so, the plaintiff claiming rent-free possession would be required to prove his rent-free possession (peaceably and not tainted with fraud) for sixty years before he can get a decree. MAHABEER PERSHAD v. OOMRAO SINGH 1 Agra, 167

417. ————— Rent-free land
—Benares.—In a suit for rent of land in the province of Benares which was rent-free and recorded as such at the revision of settlement in 1840-41 and 1842, the zamindar must show that, if it was lakhiraj in 1197 Fasli, there has been a legal resumption and assessment by judicial award: or if māl in 1197 Fusli, he must prove legal resumption and actual levy of rents. The burden of proving this by direct and specific evidence lies on the zamindar. MOTEE LALL v. JANKI ROY 3 Agra, 364

418. ————— Suit to have certain lands declared māl.—Where it is admitted that the defendants hold certain lands within the plaintiff's zamindari, some at least of which are rent-paying, the defendants, if desirous of proving that any of these lands are rent-free, are bound to give some prima facie evidence of the fact, before they can call upon the plaintiff, the zamindar, to prove that the whole or any part of the lands are māl. settlement.—Where, in a suit for possession of resumed lands, the plaintiff contends that the laws under which the lands in dispute were resumed (Bengal Regulations II of 1819 and III of 1828) contemplate assessment and not ejectment, the plaintiff must prove that he had formerly applied for and been refused a settlement of the lands. ABDOL GUNNY v. COMMISSIONER OF THE SUNDERBUNS 2 W. R., 239

422. ————— Suit for land as lakhiraj—Dispute as to land being māl or lakhiraj.—In a suit in which plaintiff claimed four plots of land as belonging to his patni, and defendant alleged that they formed part of the resumed land of a jote for which he had obtained a decree in a resumption suit, and of which he had ever since been in possession, the parties went to trial on the issue whether the land was māl as beyond the limits of the decree, or lakhiraj as included in the chittahs, according to which possession was given to the defendant in execution. On a consideration of what the latter had received under the decree, the first Court held that he was not entitled to retain the disputed land. The Appellate Court did not look beyond the plaintiff's chittahs. Held that the circumstances justified the first Court in deviating somewhat from the usual rule of law as regards the onus probandi, and that the course taken by it was most consonant with justice. BISSAMBHUR BANERJEE v. KOYLASH CHUNDER BOSE 23 W. R., 388

424. ————— Suit for declaration of lakhiraj title—Possession, Proof of—Title, Proof of.—Where a plaintiff comes into Court to prove a lakhiraj title, no proof of possession for years (unless it be carried beyond 1790) as apparent lakhiraj can excuse him from proving his title. 444. ———— Act XI of 1859, s. 37—Incumbrance, Annulment of—Burden of proof—Tenure held since permanent settlement.—In a suit for ejectment by a purchaser at a revenue sale, the defence was that the defendants held the land as a subordinate talukh, which had been in existence and in their possession and that of their predecessors since the time of the permanent settlement. It was found as a fact that the tenure was in existence in the year 1798-99. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed, and he now contended that the facts found could not protect the tenure in the absence of proof that the tenure was in existence at the date of the permanent settlement. Held that, although in the first instance the burden of proof is upon the defendants, the fact that defendants were in possession for such a length of time was sufficient to discharge the onus and establish that the tenure was protected. That in a case like this no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down as to when the burden of proof shifts from one side to the other, and that each case must be governed by its merits. *NITYANUND ROY v. of 1876—Bengal Excise Act, II of 1878—Liability of master for servant's breach of license—A, who held a certificate under Act VII of 1878 (the Excise Act) from the Deputy Commissioner of Police that he was entitled to a license from the Collector to sell muddut upon the conditions set forth therein, obtained such a license from the Collector under Act
I of 1878 (The Opium Act) upon the conditions mentioned. No license was granted by the Deputy Commissioner of Police, it not being usual for licenses to be granted by the police where a license had been issued by the Collector upon a certificate from the Deputy Commissioner. A was charged under s 40 of Act IV of 1866 [as amended by Bengal Act II of 1876] with a breach of the conditions, not of the license, but of the certificate, the act complained of having been committed by A's servant. Held that the sale of muddut is regulated by Act I of 1878, and therefore no license from the Commissioner of Police for the sale of muddut was requisite under ss 36 and 37 of Act IV of 1866. Held further that s 39 of Act IV of 1866 applied to the case, and that under that section a license from the Deputy Commissioner of Police was necessary for the sale of muddut and accordingly that A, although he had obtained a certificate from the Deputy Commissioner of Police entitling him to a license under Act I of 1878, was liable to punishment by reason of his not having, under s 39 of Act IV of 1866, also obtained a certificate from the Deputy Commissioner. See In holder of the license is to keep a daily correct account showing the quantity of opium received and sold, and other details. Art. 18 sets out that on infringement of any of the conditions contained in the form or imposed by the Opium Act the license may be cancelled. The petitioner, a licensed vendor of opium, was convicted of having kept incorrect accounts in contravention of the rules made under s. 5 of the Opium Act, and having thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 9 of that Act. He was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs200, and in default of payment to undergo rigorous imprisonment for four months. Held that the conviction and sentence must be set aside, there being nothing in any of the rules made under s. 5 of the Act which would make the preparation of an incorrect account punishable under s. 9.

The power of arrest without warrant referred to in cl. (g) of s. 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code is an unqualified power, and not a conditional power, as in s. 24 of Act XIII of 1857, which only gives the right to a police officer to arrest without warrant in case the accused does not furnish the security required by that section. Where a police officer therefore, in respect of an offence under s. 9 of the Opium Act not coming under s. 14 of the Act, made a search in the house of the accused without an order of a Magistrate,—Held that his action could not be justified, either under s. 24 of Act XIII of 1857 or under the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that he was liable in an action for damages for the illegal search. was summarily settled with J S on the 24th April following. A talukhdari sanad was granted to J S, and he was subsequently registered as talukhdar under the provisions of Act I of 1869. In a suit against J S by persons alleging themselves to be joint in family and estate with him, to have their interest in the talukh declared, held by the Commissioner of Seetapore in Oudh, confirming the decision of the settlement officer, that, under Act I of 1869, the defendant was protected by his sanad against any claim of the plaintiffs in respect of the talukh. Held by the Privy Council, on appeal, that as a person who lands comprised within the talukh for another, and be liable to account accordingly, the suit must be remanded for trial as to whether the defendant had agreed or become bound, to hold the villages comprised in the summary settlement and sanad, or the rents and profits thereof, in trust for the plaintiffs HARDEO BUX v. JAWAHIR SINGH [1 L. R., 3 Calc., 522; L. R., 4 I. A., 178

Held by the Privy Council after remand that Act I of 1869, which was passed before the suit was decided by the Court of first instance, did not operate so as to change the relative conditions of the parties, and to put an end to the trust upon which the defendant had previously held the estate. The estate in his hands remained thereafter subject to the trust, and there can be no difference in this respect between an express trust and a trust implied or presumed from a fair and reasonable interpretation of the acts and declarations of the defendant. The talukhdar in whom no such trust is vested is entitled to the proprietary right in the lands forming the talukhdari estate comprised in the sanad. A claim against the talukhdar for the proprietary right included lands in which the claimant alleged himself to have purchased under proprietary rights which were not claimed. A decree maintaining the talukhdar's proprietary right was made without prejudice to a claim for the under-proprietary rights. HAIDAR ALI KHAN v. NAWAB ALI KHAN. . . . I. L. R., 17 Cal., 311 [L. 5. ————— Talukhdars—Title obtained by talukhdar under his sanad—Effect of confiscation of 1858 upon previous gift—Attempt to establish trust for claimants as to part of talukhdari estate—Claim to sub-proprietary right distinguished.—The sanad granting a talukhdar's estate confers prima facie an absolute title upon the grantee. A gift of villages by a talukhdar to collateral relations, if effectively made in 1850, and whether absolute or only for the maintenance of the donees out of the rents and profits, was rendered, by the effect of the confiscation of 1858, inoperative after that event to establish an interest as against the talukhdar holding under a sanad comprising the villages. Where a claim was based upon the principle that the conduct of a sanad-holding talukhdar and of his predecessor had been sufficient to establish against him a liability to make good, out of his talukh, interests, as to which ground was supposed to have been given for his relations to claim,—Held that such a claim was not established merely by the claimants having been left in possession of villages, and having paid to the talukhdar only the proportion of the revenue assessed upon them, during the whole time of the troubles in Oudh, and afterwards. Held also that the question of the claimants having an under-proprietary right in such villages was entirely irrelevant to a claim for a declaration that they had proprietary right therein, on which latter title they sought to found a right to have their names entered in the settlement record; and held that, although there are cases in which the claimant of a proprietary right may be allowed to maintain on the same facts, that he is an under-proprietor, this claim was not one of them. *RAM SINGH v. nexation of the province, the kabuliati had been taken in the name of the plaintiff's brother as talukhdar, who afterwards had been settled with, at both the summary settlements. By primogeniture, whether lineal or by proximity of degree (of which latter kind there was no evidence as to its being the customary one) he was the heir. To him a sanad had been granted, and the talukhdari had been entered in list II under the Act of 1869. On the other hand, it was urged that the above was consistent with the existence of a trust for the benefit of the titular talukhdar's uncles, of whom the defendant was the survivor, they having assented to the recognition of a nominal title in their nephew. Held that in intention as well as in form the grant of the talukhdari had been made absolutely to the sanad-holding talukhdar. In regard to the state of things before annexation, it might have been questioned whether or not the property was being held benami at that time. But after the Oudh Estates' Act, 1869, had become law, the title shown by the plaintiff must prevail, and he must recover the estate, unless a trust for the defendant should have been established. There had been no consideration given, and there was nothing to create a trust. There had been no transfer, no estoppel, and no bar by time. In 1868 an award had been made by a body of talukhdars as arbitrators within s. 33 of the Act, between members of the family other than the present disputants. This as well as a wajib-ul-urz of one of the villages of the talukh was admissible as evidence of what was the custom in regard to its devolution. In 1879 the plaintiff had, on his brother's death, while admitting "the custom prevailing in my family of gaddinashini," joined in a petition that the defendant's name should be entered dakhil kharij in the revenue records. Held that there might be a withdrawal of any gratuitous admission, unless there should be some obligation not to withdraw it; that there was no such obligation here; and that there had been no proof of any title upon which the admission could rest. *MUHAMMAD IMAM ALI KHAN v. 7. ————— A talukhdar settled with on terms imposing a trust on him—Settlement of estate—Second summary settlement, 1858—Effect of the confiscation—Rights of the Government.—A sanad-holding talukhdar, whose name has been entered in lists I and II, made in conformity with the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, holds the talukh subject to such trusts as have been validly created. At annexation, four descendants of a Mahomedan proprietor were entitled in equal shares to the ancestral estate, which in 1858, at the second summary settlement, was settled with the only one of the four who presented himself to the Settlement officer. The settlement with him, as talukhdar, which was then made, was, however, made upon terms providing that the absent co-sharers on their return should obtain their shares. This accorded with his application expressing his willingness. Held that the question whether the talukhdar had become a trustee for the plaintiff in respect of his share depended on the terms on which the estate had been granted to the talukhdar

as to the co-sharer's return or admission to share had been deemed necessary by the Chief Commissioner, who authorized the settlement with the talukhdar in reliance on his assurance. The right of the co-sharer, who returned in 1859, was accordingly established.

Will—Custom as to partition.—By the 8th paragraph of the Oudh proclamation of March 1858, it was declared that C L (at that time deceased), zamindar of Mourawan, and others, were theuiceforward the sole hereditary proprietors of the lands which they held when Oudh came under British rule, and which form part of the subject of these suits. Summary settlements of the said lands were subsequently made with G S (one of the sons of C L) by the Government between the 1st April 1858 and the 10th October 1859; a talukhdari sanad was granted to him before the passing of Act I of 1869; and he entered into a kabuliat for the same. His name was not entered in the second schedule annexed to the Act, but C L's was. By a document dated 7th February 1860, relating to property in the district of Oonao, and by other documents similar in effect relating to property in other districts, G S directed as follows: "I have been requested by Government to submit an application on the subject of primogeniture, with a view that the talukh may not be split into pieces as I would wish. Now the custom that has been followed in my family for generations past is this: that the eldest member of the family continues to be the head, while the others remain obedient to him; but every one possesses a share in the talukh. Under the custom of the family, the other brothers are at liberty to have their shares separated, should they wish it. The head has no power under the old custom to alienate the estate without consulting every sharer. I therefore wish that the old custom of maintaining the share of each shareholder be preserved, in opposition to the one in accordance with which one member of the family is allowed to succeed." In suits for partition amongst the descendants of C L and of his brother, who together constituted a Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara law, all the property the subject of the suits having been found to be the joint property of the said family, it was contended on behalf of the appellants in the first appeal that all the estates included in the sanad to their father G S, and summary settlements, whether previously joint property of the family or not, became the separate self-acquired property of G S; that he was the sole malguzar thereof; and that he and his sons were the sole beneficial owners of it, and that he had no power to transfer it by will or by alienation inter vivos. Held that the sanad and summary settlements were a mere grant by the Government to one member of the family of property which belonged to the family jointly, and were not intended to enure to the sole benefit of the grantee, and did not affect the rights of the family. As regards such property granted to G S (if any) which was not previously part of the family estates, it was granted for services presumably rendered with the use of the joint family funds, and could not therefore be separate self-acquired property within the meaning of the Hindu law. Held also that, assuming any portion of such property to have been self-acquired by G S, he must, in consequence of Act I of 1869, be deemed to have acquired therein a permanent heritable and transferable right, and had power by will, or alienation inter vivos, to transfer the same. Held further that the document of the 7th

February 1860 and other similar documents, so far as they related to the property in Oudh, amounted to a will within the definition of Act I of 1869, s. 2. Taken in conjunction with other documents, and having regard to the acts of different members of the family under it, the same amounted to evidence of an alienation inter vivos which in G S's lifetime transferred the property to the family to be held as joint family property. Ss. 16-19 of Act I of 1869 have no retrospective effect. HURPURSHAL v. SHEO DYAL. RAM SAHOY v. SHEO DYAL. BALMOKUND v. SHEO DYAL. RAM SAHOY v. BALMOKUND

The eldest of three brothers had succeeded to an impartible family estate, and to a talukh, also impartible, which had been, during the lifetime of their father, entered in the first and second, but not in the third, of the lists prepared in conformity with s 8 of the Oudd Estates Act I of 1869. Held with reference to the indicia of a testamentary character, there being provisions for contingencies which might not be ascertained till the death of the maker of the instrument as compared with the technical matters attending it, that this instrument was not a transfer inter vivos, but was a will, and within the above Act. Held also on the objection that a will or declaration made by the father had fixed a mode of descent which could not be altered by his successor, that s 11 of the above Act, giving to every heir and legatee of a talukhdar power to transfer or to bequeath his estate, is not controlled by the proviso in s 19, declaring that nothing in that section shall affect wills

If, as happened in the present case where the estate descended to a single heir, the heir according to lineal primogeniture is more remote in degree from the ancestor than other persons, who may be collaterals, coming within the line of heirship, then according to the classification in the Oudd Estates Act, nearness in degree prevails over directness of line. 3. ——— Meaning of "intestate" as there used—Written but unregistered authority to adopt—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17.—The Oudh Estates Act, 1869, requires the registration of the writing by which an authority to adopt is exercised; but not the registration of the authority, which is required by the Act to be in writing. The Indian Registration Act (III of 1877), which does require authorities to adopt to be registered, expressly excepts authorities conferred by will. The word "intestate," in s. 13, sub-s. 1, of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, means intestate as to the talukhdari estate; and the use of the word does not exclude from the exception in that sub-section a son adopted under an authority conferred by a talukhdar's unregistered will. A talukhdar by his will authorized his senior widow to select and adopt a minor male child of his family to be the owner of the entire riasat. This power having been exercised, the following objections to the adoption were disallowed: first, one founded on the will not having been registered, and, consequently, the authority not having been registered; secondly, one founded on the erroneous argument that the adopted son was not within the class excepted in s. 13, sub-s. 1, and therefore could not take under an unregistered will. BHAIYA RABIDAT SINGH v. single heir by primogeniture. The last talukhdar died without leaving a son, but left a widow, and by a former wife two daughters, of whom the elder had a son. The widow's claim to an estate for life, under sub-s. 17 of s. 22 of the above Act, was met by the defence that the daughter's son, having been treated by his maternal grandfather in all respects as his own son, was under sub-s. 4 entitled to inherit the talukh. The present suit was brought by the superior proprietor, the talukhdar, in whose estate the mehal was comprised, against the whole body of under-proprietors for arrears of rent accrued, while the term of the above transfer was running. Held that the provision in s. 123 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876, to the effect that such transfer shall not affect the joint liability of the co-sharers of the mehal, had not the effect of charging the co-sharers other than the three transferees with any liability for rent accrued during the term of the transfer. 3.——— Right of tenant under talukhdari settlement—Tenancy-at-will—Right of resumption—Absence of under-proprietary right.—At the confiscation and restoration of Oudh lands in 1858, it was intended to settle and restore under regulation to the talukhdars, with certain exceptions, the talukhdars' rights, and also to protect as far as was necessary, by sub-settlement or otherwise, the existing rights of the occupiers; but there is nothing to show any intention to advance beyond what the rights were at the time. Where the relation of talukhdar and tenant at a rent of land within a talukh has been shown to have existed at that date, and since the tenant cannot defeat the talukhdar's right of resumption on due notice, notwithstanding a lengthened duration of tenancy, he is entitled to an under-proprietary right, either on the ground that, by reason of this state of things having brought him within the meaning of paragraph 2 of the schedule to Act XXVI of 1866, or on the ground that time and undisturbed enjoyment have ripened his holding into a species of ownership. The issues between the parties raising only the question of some form of proprietary right, still, if the tenant had shown any right whatever to remain undisturbed by the talukhdar, such right would have been considered on this appeal and would have received effect. 9. ——— Forest lands—Acts of ownership—Property in the soil—Construction of istemrari sanad of 1803 as to lands granted—Evidence of possession—Questions of fact—Proof of zamindari title—A zamindar claimed from the Government the proprietary possession of a tract of hill and forest in virtue of an istemrari sanad of the year 1803 conferring upon the grantee his heirs and successors a permanent property in the zamindari as then possessed To the sanad, which was aptly worded to include the subject of this claim, the acts of the zamindar had been ascribed. But it did not contain any description of the lands which it was intended to carry, a marginal note only specifying three villages then comprising the zamindari The plaintiff having proved that he and his ancestors had cut wood, pastured cattle, and gathered forest produce in certain forests for fifty years, the lower Court held that such acts of enjoyment were only evidence of an easement and not of adverse possession Held by the High Court that these acts as they had been done under the belief and assertion that the said tracts formed portion of the zamindari, and that the plaintiff and his ancestors were owners of the said tracts, were evidence of adverse possession. In principle, an act done is one of ownership or evidence of an easement according as the person doing it asserts general ownership or a particular right in another property. The enjoyment of any right of ownership over the soil is prima facie proof of ownership of the soil. Where, therefore, the lower Court found such an enjoyment of a forest as proved title to the profits thereof, and such enjoyment was accompanied with an assertion of ownership of the soil.—Held that the Court was bound to find a title to the soil established. SIVASUBRAMANAYA v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

Held by the Privy Council on appeal (affirming the decision of the High Court) that the grant was not confined to the villages so named, and to an area in their immediate vicinity, but that the whole tract of hill and forest was claimable on its being shown, by direct evidence or reasonable inference, that it was in the possession of the zamindar when he obtained a permanent title from the Government. As to part of the tract, the zamindar's acts of possession, such as grazing cattle, cutting timber, and collecting forest produce, had been exclusive of the exercise of such rights by any other persons; but as to another part of the tract, his acts of that character had been concurrent with a similar user of hill and forest by raiyats of neighbouring villages, not part of the zamindari and belonging to the Government. Held, as to both parts, that the acts of possession, which had been found by both the Courts below to have been done by the zamindar, did not fall short of proving his proprietary possession, and that the user by the villagers, not having taken place in the assertion of conflicting proprietary right, and whether or not they were sufficient to establish rights of easement, were neither in amount nor quality sufficient to displace the zamindar's proprietary title. The decision of the first Court that the exercise of the abovementioned rights by the zamindar was evidence only of the right on his part to use the land of another for the purposes indicated, had been rightly reversed by the High Court. Where the proprietary right in a tract of land had been constantly asserted, all questions between the disputants as to the amount of the use of the tract by the claimant, and as to the sufficiency of such use to establish his possession over the whole extent, were held to be questions of fact. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. 1. — District panchayat—Mad. Reg. XII of 1816—Mad. Reg. VII of 1816—Madras Civil Courts Act, III of 1873.—Neither the total repeal of Regulation VII of 1816 by Act III of 1813 (Madras Civil Courts Act) nor the partial repeal of Regulation XII of 1816, so far as it contained words of reference to Regulation VII of 1816, abolished the jurisdiction of district panchayats. A Collector cannot order a reference to a district panchayat under Regulation XII of 1816 unless there has been (1) an inquiry as to whether the parties will submit to the jurisdiction of a village panchayat; (2) an objection from either party to such reference, and a request in writing by one of the parties that the matter be referred to a district panchayat. CHIKATI ZAMINDAR v. 1. ——— Dealings with parda women
—Onus of proof—Exence of bond fides—A Hindu parda woman is entitled to receive in the Courts of this country that protection which the Court of Chancery in England always extends to the weak, ignorant and infirm and to those who for any other reason are specially likely to be imposed upon by the exertion of undue influence which is presumed to have been exerted unless the contrary be shown. In all dealings therefore with persons so situated it is incumbent on the party interested in upholding the transaction to show that its terms are fair and equitable the most usual mode of discharging such onus being to show that the lady had good independent advice in the matter and acted therein altogether
at arm's length from the other contracting party.

2. ——— Execution of deed by pardanashin—Registration of deed—Evidence of executed on—In cases of transactions by parda women, mere registration does not go far to corroborate the proof of their validity unless a mutation of names takes place which if done under a mooketnama has not the same effect as against a parda woman as it has against a person capable of transacting his own business and acting for himself. Where the conveyance by a parda woman is impeached there ought to be clear evidence not of the mere signature by the party but that the secluded woman had the means of knowing what she was about. FUZZUL

Evidence of genuineness—The mere registration of a lease is no proof of its genuineness especially in the case of a lease which was first produced as a valid instrument nearly nine years after its execution and which was alleged to have been granted by a pardanashin lady but no satisfactory evidence was given that she had put her signature and seal to it and that she did so with a knowledge of the nature and contents of the instrument. DOOLEE CHAND :

any intention of creating an absolute wakf, or that she understood the effect of the deed when she executed it, the onus was on the plaintiffs to show that she was fully aware of the character of the document and its legal effect, and that she had proper professional advice at the time of its execution. In the absence of such proof,—Held that the deed was not binding on her. DELROOS BANOO BEGUM v. ASHGAR ALLY KHAN

Held, in the same case, on appeal to the Privy Council, who affirmed the judgment of the High Court: A Court, when dealing with the disposition of her property by a parda woman, ought to be satisfied that the transaction was explained to her, and that she knew what she was doing; especially in a case where, without legal assistance, for no consideration, and without any equivalent, she has executed a document, written in a language she does not understand, which deprives her of all her property. In the case of a pardanashin woman who has no legal assistance, the ordinary presumption, that if a person of competent capacity signs a deed, he understands the instrument to which he has affixed his name, does not arise. ASHGAR ALI v. Delroos Banoo Begam*, I. L. R., 3 Calc., 324, and in Tacoordeen Tewarry v. Ali Hossein Khan, L. R., 1 I. 11. ———— Conditions necessary to the valid execution of a document by pardanashin—Suit to set aside deed—Onus probandi.—Where a deed executed by a pardanashin woman is sought to be set aside, it is for the party wishing to uphold the deed to show affirmatively that the transaction intended to be carried out by the deed was a reasonable one; that the executant was fully cognizant of the meaning and legal and practical effect thereof, and that she executed the same with her full and free consent, that is to say, that she had independent advice on the subject and was not otherwise as, e.g., by reason of bodily or mental infirmity or by reason of fraud or coercion practised upon her, incapable of giving a rational consent to the transaction. One M, a pardanashin lady of some 70 years of age, and more or less illiterate, executed on the 11th September 1888 a deed which purported to divest her immediately of all her property in favour of her son H, who was dumb and imbecile, her daughter S who was named in the deed as guardian of H, and that daughter's son T. T was betrothed to a daughter of one F, and one of S's daughters was married to one S H. Those two persons, viz, F and S H, were mainly instrumental in procuring the execution of the deed in question. The deed was drafted in very artificial language and it was not shown that the executant ever understood its contents or effect. The executant was moreover at the time of execution in ill health and great mental distress owing to the death of her son H which had happened some months previously. The deed was also executed in the absence of the person who was at that time the executant's chief adviser and the manager of her property. Lastly it appeared that as soon as the executant came to know what the true nature of the deed was, and that proceedings had been initiated in the Revenue Department for mutation of names she took immediate measures to show her dissent from the provisions of the deed and her disapproval of what had been done thereunder. Held that under the circumstances above set forth the deed in question could not be considered as having been executed under the conditions necessary in such cases, and must be set aside. *Ashgar Ali v Delroos Banoo Begum, I L R, 3 Calc 324, Mahomed Baksh Khan v Hosseini Bibi, I L R, 15 Calc 684, Behari Lal v Habiba Bibi, I L R, 8 All, 267, and Kaniz Fatima v Abbas Ali, I L R, 8 All, 627, referred to. they had made the power-of-attorney. There was nothing to show that the ladies had ever benefited in any way from the money advanced under the bond. Held that, even if the ladies behind the parda were in fact the two defendants, this evidence would not be enough to bind them, and that it was for the plaintiff, who sought to bring their property to sale on the strength of a transaction with them, to show that they were free agents in the matter, and, having a clear knowledge of what they were doing, accorded their consent to it. *Buzloor Raheem v. —Sale of an undivided share—Burden of proving validity of sale by a gosha woman.—Suit for partition and possession of an undivided share of property sold to plaintiff by an aged gosha lady of the class of Canarese Mahomedans called Navayats. The property sold was the vendor's share as heiress of her father, brother, and sister, who died in 1856, 1866, and 1871, respectively; but it appeared that, the property of the family had been in the possession of one managing member since 1856. Held that, the plaintiff having discharged the burden of proving that the conveyance to him was voluntarily executed, and that the transaction evidenced by it was real and bond fide, the conveyance was operative. KHATIFA v. ISMAIL I. L. R., 12 Mad., 380

20. ————— Sale of villages
by a wife to her husband—Proof of execution of deed of sale.—The purchase-money had not been paid on what purported to be a deed of sale of villages by a Mahomedan wife to her husband for a price which, however, the deed acknowledged to have been paid. After her death, two of her relations, disputing the due execution of the sale-deed, sued the husband, who had obtained possession, claiming in the alternative either that they should obtain their shares in the property of the deceased, or, if the sale of the villages should be maintained, that they should receive their proportion of the price as due to the estate left by her. The two Courts below concurred in finding that the wife, a pardanashin, was capable of managing her own affairs, and that she had not received the price. The first Court inferred from the state of things that the wife had in a manner made a gift of the villages to the husband. The High Court reversed that judgment, and decided that, with regard to the probability of influence on the part of the husband, the absence of any independent advice for the wife and other circumstances, the transaction was without effect. The Judicial Committee found that there not being a case of undue influence exercised, either made by the plaintiff or raised by the issues, they found no evidence that the price stated was inadequate, or the sale an improvident one, or that the husband had been released from having to pay the price. From the findings on the evidence the pre-emption was that the wife intended to pass the property for some purpose, and that the suggestion of a gift being excluded, the deed operated as a sale according to what it purported to be. They did not throw any doubt on the sound doctrine, laid down in numerous cases, as to the obligations upon persons taking benefits from pardanashin ladies. 10. ——— Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 337, 339—Accomplice—Tender of pardon, Effect of—Subsequent trial of accomplice for connected offences.—A prisoner charged before a Magistrate at Benares with offences punishable under ss. 471, 472, and 474 of the Penal Code, made a confession to the Magistrate in respect of those offences. He was then sent in custody to Calcutta, and was there, together with other persons, charged before a Magistrate with offences punishable under ss. 467, 473, and 475. The conduct to which these charges related was closely connected and mixed up with that to which the charges first-mentioned had reference. Under s. 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate at Calcutta tendered a pardon to the prisoner upon the condition specified in that section, and the prisoner accepted the pardon, and gave evidence for the prosecution. The Magistrate held that this evidence was not sufficiently corroborated, and accordingly discharged all the accused, but the pardon was not withdrawn, and there was nothing to show that the Magistrate was dissatisfied with the prisoner's statements or considered that he had not complied with the conditions on which the pardon was tendered. Subsequently the prisoner was committed by the Magistrate of Benares for trial before the Court of Session upon the charges under ss. 471, 472, and 474 of the Penal Code. He pleaded not guilty, but did not in terms plead the pardon as a bar to the trial, though he made some reference to the subject; and the Sessions Judge, having made a brief inquiry as to the proceedings at Calcutta, came to the conclusion that there was no sufficient proof of any conditional pardon, and convicted and sentenced the accused. Held that, by the terms of the conditional pardon granted to the accused by the Calcutta Magistrate, the conditions of which were satisfied as was shown by its never having been withdrawn, the accused was protected from trial at Benares in respect of the offences under ss. 471, 472, and 474, and was not liable to be proceeded against in respect of them, and that the persons, tenders a conditional pardon to one of them, examines him as a witness, and subsequently discharges all the accused for want of a prima facie case against them, the words "every person accepting a tender under this section shall be examined as a witness in the case" mean that for all purposes (subject to failure to satisfy the conditions of the pardon as provided for by s 339) such a person ceases to be liable for the offence or offences under inquiry or (with reference to a 339) for "any other offence of which he appears to have been guilty in connection with the same matter" while making "a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offences" directly under inquiry. The words last quoted refer to the importance, when a pardon is tendered, of encouraging the approver to give the fullest details, so that points may be found in his evidence which may be capable of corroboration. The question of how far the pardon protects him, and what portion of it should not protect him, ought not to be treated in a narrow spirit. QUEEN EMPRESS v GANGA CHARAN I. L. R., 11 All, 79

parties concerned, where such intentions are clearly expressed, and are not repugnant to any general principle of English law. The Courts will not, in such a case, apply rules of English law which, though well established and binding on English Courts, are yet so special in their nature and origin as to be inapplicable to the different circumstances of this country. The members of a Parsi family, the heirs of one Framji Cowasji Banaji, deceased, entered into an agreement with one another, bearing date the 24th May 1851, by which they agreed that the remaining income, after paying the deceased's debts, of a certain estate which had belonged to the deceased, called the Poway estate—an estate situated in the Island of Salsette, and therefore in the mofussil of the Presidency of Bombay—should be apportioned "to the heirs mentioned in cl. 7 (of the agreement)"—i.e., among the various heirs of Framji Cowasji Banaji, deceased, the parties to the agreement—"but, after their death, their shares are to be enjoyed and received by their heirs and children from generation to generation for ever." It was contended that, Parsis being subject to English law, these words conferred an absolute estate in their respective shares upon the various parties to the agreement under the rule in Shelley's case. Held per BAYLEY, J., that the plain intention of the parties to the agreement, appearing on the face of the agreement, was that they themselves should take only a life-estate to the extent of their respective shares in the remaining income of the Poway estate; and that the rule in Shelley's case should not be applied so as to defeat that plain intention. Held on appeal (affirming the order of BAYLEY, J.) that, even assuming English law to be applicable, the English law so to be applied could not include the rule in Shelley's case, which is a law of property or tenure based on fental considerations, and unsuited to the circumstances of India; that the rule of construction to be applied to the agreement must in any case be to give effect to the intention of the parties according to the plain meaning of the language; and that to construe the agreement as giving more than a life-interest to the parties thereto would be to defeat their obvious intention. *MITHIBAI v. 5. ——— The same agreement came before the Court for its construction in a suit brought by the parties interested for the administration of the estate of Framji Cowasji Banaji. In that suit it was contended, and was held by the Division Court, that the subsequent gift to the "heirs and children (of the signatories) from generation to generation for ever" was void as infringing the rule against perpetuities. On appeal.—Held that the settlement in favour of the heirs and children of each signatory was in law a valid settlement and not void as creating a perpetuity. In the absence of words in the context showing that they were intended to take less, the respective heirs and children of the signatories took an absolute estate. A gift to the heirs of A from generation to generation confers on them, when ascertained, the same estate as

7. — Husband and wife—Parsi Matrimonial Court—Act XV of 1865—Suit by wife for judicial separation—Alimony after decree dismissing wife's suit and pending appeal—Alimony pending petition for review of judgment—Practice in allotment of alimony—Discretion of Court—A wife sued her husband for judicial separation in the Parsi Matrimonial Court. Alimony was granted to her by an order dated 11th July 1891, which directed the defendant to pay alimony to her from the 15th April 1891, "until the final decree herein be passed." On the 18th July 1891 the suit was dismissed, and after that date the defendant ceased to pay alimony. The plaintiff obtained a rule for review of judgment, which was discharged on the 27th January 1892 and on the 18th March 1892 she filed an appeal against the decree dismissing the suit and against the order refusing a review. She now applied for an order directing the defendant to pay her all the arrears of alimony "pendente lite" from the date of filing the suit, or so much as had not been paid, and that he should pay her further alimony until the final disposal of the appeal. Held, (1) dismissing the application, that the words "final decree herein," contained in the order of the 11th July 1891, by which alimony was granted, meant the decree in the suit, and not in the appeal, (2) that the Parsi Matrimonial Court constituted under Act XV of 1865 had no power to award alimony "pendente lite" after decree and pending appeal, (3) an unsuccessful wife is not entitled to

The formal consent on behalf of the plaintiff was not given by his father, but by his uncle with whom he was living and by whom he had been adopted. Nineteen years afterwards the plaintiff filed this suit praying for a declaration that the pretended marriage was null and void, and did not create the status of husband and wife between the plaintiff and defendant. The defendant resisted the suit, and claimed to be the lawful wife of the plaintiff. The plaintiff and defendant never lived together as man and wife, nor was the marriage ever consummated. Held that, under the circumstances, the formal consent of the uncle and the tacit consent of the father were enough to satisfy the requirements of s. 8 of Act XV of 1865, which requires the previous consent, to which is now added by s. 12 of the Letters Patent. Held also that the law to be applied was the English law (subject, however, to any well established usage); that by the English law such a marriage would be an incestuous and imperfect marriage capable of repudiation by either party after arriving at years of discretion, but capable also of being made a valid and binding marriage by the consent of the parties thereto after they had arrived at such age. Held further that the circumstances of the case showed that there had been such acquiescence in, and acceptance of, the marriage by the plaintiff after arriving at years of discretion as to render the marriage valid and binding on him, and incapable of subsequent repudiation. Consummation is the best proof of consent to a marriage, but is not the only proof. And semble that, although the practice of infant marriages is one which finds no warrant in their own religious system, the Parsis in Western India have in the course of centuries so generally adopted such practice from their Hindu neighbours as to give such marriages amongst themselves all the validity they possess amongst Hindus. making them independent of any question of subsequent consent or non-consent by the parties thereto.

The plaintiff claimed a share in D's estate, contending that he was the widower of J, one of the daughters of the intestate, and entitled as such under s. 5 of the Parsi Intestate Succession Act (XXI of 1865). Held that he was the widower of J within the meaning of the section, and as such was entitled to a share in D's estate. She had never lived with the defendant as his wife. The Subordinate Judge held that the marriage was valid and binding, being of opinion that the custom of infant marriage among the Parsis was well established and recognized. On appeal the Judge confirmed the decree, holding that at all events in 1869, when the marriage took place, the custom was common and recognized as binding. On second appeal the High Court concurred with the opinion expressed in Peshotam v. Meherbai, I. L. R., 13 Bom., 302, that the Zoroastrian system did not contemplate marriage in infancy, but the lower Courts having found a custom had grown up among Parsis in India validating such marriages, and that the custom was in force in 1869, did not consider it open on second appeal to arrive at an independent finding as to whether the evidence established the existence of such a custom. Held that a Parsi suing to have a marriage declared void is "acting in the matter of marriage," and therefore the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), which makes the age of eighteen the age of majority, does not apply to a question of limitation with regard to such suit. The age of majority in such a case is that prescribed by the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865), viz., twenty-one years. Held also that art. 120 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) was applicable to the above suit, and that the plaintiff having, for the purpose of bringing the suit, attained her majority at twenty-one, the suit was not barred. Act XV of 1865 contains no provision as to the age at which a Parsi marriage can be validly contracted, the matter being left to the general law which governs Parsis in that particular, just as the English Marriage Act (4 Geo. IV, c. 76) leaves it to be dealt with by the common law of England. BAI SHIRINBAI v. KHARSHEDJI NASARVANJI MASALAVALA

13. ——— Intestate succession among Parsis—Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865), s. 7, sch. II, cl. 2—Next-of-kin.—One Jerbai, a Parsi widow, died intestate and without issue, her father, mother, three brothers and two sisters having predeceased her. Two of her brothers and one sister had left children. Some of these children had also predeceased her, leaving children (grand-nephews and nieces of Jerbai). Two of this last mentioned class had also predeceased her, leaving children (great-grand-nephews and nieces of Jerbai). Held that Jerbai's property should, in the first instance, be divided into three shares, i.e., one for each of the two predeceased brothers who left children, and one for the predeceased sister who left a child. Each brother's share to be two-fifths and the sister's one-fifth. These shares to be sub-divided among the descendants of the two brothers and the sister, respectively, no descendant being entitled to share concurrently with his or her ancestor, and, on each division and sub-division, each male taking double the share of each female standing in the same degree of propinquity. In art. 2 of the second schedule of the Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865) the gift to lineal descendants is substitutional in the sense that they take nothing if the head of their branch of the family is living, whereas, if he is dead, they stand in his place and take the share which he would have taken. will take equal shares with the living descendants collectively. If all the brothers are dead, then the share which each would have taken had he survived, will be taken by his lineal descendants. If in either case the predeceased was a sister, her lineal descendants will take her half share only. In both ss 6 and 7 of the Parsi Succession Act the words "next of kin" and "relatives" are synonymous and are collective names for the persons mentioned in the first and second schedules respectively. HIRJIBAI CUPSETJI BHANDUPWALA v. 14 ——— Act XII of 1865 s 8—Succession Act, s 42—Advancement—as to advancement contained in the Statute of Distribution, s 5 it was not the intention of the Legislature to preserve the last mentioned rule in force for the Parsi community. DHANJIBAI BOWANJI GUGRAI v. NATAZDAI I L R, 2 Bom, 75

16 ——— Act XXI of 1865—Childless widow of intestate son of Parsi— It is not a condition precedent to the application of s 5 of Act XII of 1865 that the predeceased son of an intestate Parsi shall have left a widow and issue. Where an intestate Parsi left him surviving a widow, sons, daughters, children of a predeceased son and the widow of another predeceased son who had died without issue and a posthumous daughter was afterwards born to the intestate,—Held that such last mentioned widow was entitled to one moiety of the share in the intestate's estate which her husband would have taken had he survived the intestate, and that the other moiety of such share devolved on the surviving issue of the intestate including the posthumous daughter and the children of his other predeceased son. MANCHERJI KAWASSI DAYUR v. factory, entered into an agreement, which (inter alia) provided that they should charge a uniform rate of R4-8-0 per palla for ginning cotton; that of this sum, R2-8-0 should be treated as the actual cost of ginning; and that the remaining R2 should be carried to a common fund, to be divided each year between the parties to the agreement in proportion to the number of ginning machines which each of them possessed. The agreement was to be in force for four years. The other parties had carried out the agreement, but the defendant, although he had carried the R2 to a separate account, refused to pay the plaintiff his share of the amount. He also refused to pay the other two parties their shares. The accounts had been duly made up, showing the sums which the defendant under the agreement had to pay both to the plaintiff and the two other parties to the agreement. The plaintiff sued the defendant for his share. The defendant contended that the plaintiff ought to have made the other parties to the agreement parties to the suit. Held that the other parties to the agreement were not necessary parties to the suit. The accounts had been made up and were admittedly correct, and they showed that the defendant had nothing to receive from any of the parties to the agreement, but that he was indebted in a definite sum to the plaintiff. HARIBHAI MANEKLAL v. He left a widow, B, and a minor son, M. At his death he made a will bequeathing his property to his son, and appointing certain executors to manage the property during the son's minority. The son died in 1877, leaving a minor widow, N. In 1879 one of the executors obtained probate of L's will from the High Court. In 1884 a suit was filed, on behalf of the minor N, against her mother-in-law, B, to recover possession of the property covered by the will of L. One of the defences to the suit was that the property in dispute had vested in the executor, who had obtained probate of the will, and that, as the defendant held the estate under the executor, the suit was not maintainable without impleading the executor. Held that the executor was not a necessary party to the suit. S. 179 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) as incorporated into the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) did not apply so far as it related to property outside Bombay. The property in dispute was situated in the Surat district. It was joint ancestral property. On the father's death, it vested in the son by survivorship, and on the son's death, it vested in the son's widow, the plaintiff in the present suit. Under the provisions, therefore, of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 4 (if that Act can be held to operate at all in the mofussil before a notification is issued under s. 2), the estate could not vest in the executor, as it had passed by survivorship to another person long before the Act came into operation. BAI HARKOR v. sale for arrears of revenue—Secretary of State for India—Res judicata—A Collector had sold an estate purporting to act under Act VI of 1859, for a supposed arrear of revenue. There was however, only an erroneous debit in the Collectorate books against the estate, in excess of the revenue actually assessed upon it, chargeable against it, and due from it. In a suit brought to set aside the sale in the Courts below, the Government had been made co-defendants but were not respondents on this appeal, and the objection was taken, on the argument of this appeal and by previous petition that they should be made parties, respondents. Held that it was a mistaken view that a decree annulling the sale in this suit would be res judicata in any future question or proceeding, as between the Government and the unsuccessful purchaser. The Secretary of State for India therefore, was not a necessary respondent.

and declaration of right to participate in a permanent settlement of a mahal resumed under Reg. II of 1819—Chur land was held by the proprietors of the adjoining estate. The chur was resumed by Government in 1835 and declared to be liable to assessment under Regulation II of 1819. The recorded proprietors of the adjoining permanently settled estate to which the chur was a contiguous accretion refused to make a permanent settlement with Government at the rent demanded. The chur was then held by Government for some time and subsequently leased out for temporary periods to strangers. In these temporary leases Government reserved the proprietor's rights to come in and take a permanent settlement on the expiry of the temporary settlements and also reserved an allowance of 10 per cent on the rent as mahikanah on their account which sum had been kept in deposit in the Collectorate treasury. In 1867 the Government made a permanent settlement with the defendant, one of the recorded proprietors of the contiguous estate of the entire chur, and refused the application of other shareholders in the estate to be joined in the settlement. The Collector, at the request of the defendant applied the deposit in his treasury to the satisfaction of the Government revenue. An unsuccessful shareholder brought a civil suit against the defendant for possession, and a declaration of his right to participate in the settlement. Held that it was not necessary to make the Government a party. KRISHNA CHANDRA SANDYAL CHOWDHRY v. 85. ————— Contract made by member of joint family in individual capacity—Right to sue alone.—The firm of S & Co., the partners of which were W S and F E, took a contract from Government on 12th November 1877 to construct a barrel-house at the Gunpowder Manufactory at Kirkee; and on the 28th November 1877 the plaintiff agreed to advance money "up to Rs. 15,000" for the purpose of enabling the firm to carry out the contract. Under the agreement, the plaintiff was to receive all sums to become due from the Government on the contractors' bills, and to pay the balance to the firm after repaying himself all advances with interest. On the same day the firm executed a power-of-attorney to the plaintiff, authorizing him to receive from the Government Engineer all such sums to become due to the firm under the contract, which power-of-attorney was deposited by plaintiff in the office of the Executive Engineer at Poona. In March or April 1878 W S left for England, up to which time Rs. 34,900 had been advanced by the plaintiff, and a balance of Rs. 14,942-5-10 still remained due to him after giving credit for the sums received on the bills passed by the Executive Engineer. On 24th July 1878 the plaintiff entered into a fresh agreement with F E similar to the former one, to make further advances to the firm up to Rs. 16,000 in addition to Rs. 15,000 on the same terms as those mentioned in the previous agreement; and by means of these advances the contract was completed at the end of 1879. In 1878 the defendant obtained a decree against W S and attached the right, title, and interest of W S in a sum of Rs. 5,034-11-9 in the hands of the Executive Engineer, which was then due to the firm on the contract. The plaintiff, who alleged that Rs. 13,700-1-11 were due to him from the firm, applied to have the attachment removed, which application was refused on 30th September 1879, and the sum attached was paid to the defendant. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover from him Rs. 5,034-11-9. Held that, although the plaintiff might be a member of an undivided Hindu family, still, as the contract was entered into with the plaintiff in his individual capacity, and as there was nothing on the face of the contract to show that the plaintiff was acting on behalf of the family, the plaintiff was entitled to sue alone. *JAGABHAI LALLUBHAI v. M brought a suit against the executors of K's will which was compromised on the payment by them to her of a certain sum. This sum she deposited with N, one of the members of a firm to be invested in N's own name, he paying her such interest as it yielded him. On the dissolution of the firm, the sum deposited by M was made over to N alone and on the death of N, his estate and with it the sum deposited by M, came into the hands of the sons of N. On the death of M, the plaintiff and two others were the heirs of K. In a suit brought by the plaintiff against the sons of N for a third share of the sum deposited by M, Held that such a suit was not a "suit for a distributive share under an intestacy or of a legacy under a will" within s. 32, Act IX of 1850. 103. ————— Suit for redemption—Parties to such suit—Equity of redemption, Interest in, of person related to the mortgagor.—The plaintiff sued the defendant to redeem certain khoti lands mortgaged by the plaintiff's father to the defendant's uncle. The defendant objected that the separated uncle and consins of the plaintiff should be made co-plaintiffs in the suit. These relations of the plaintiff were not joint members of the plaintiff's family at the time of the mortgage, nor did they claim any interest in the equity of redemption. Held that the plaintiff's uncle and cousins were not necessary parties. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be presumed that the mortgage was made by the plaintiff's father in his individual capacity. If the defendant had shown that, at the date of the mortgage, the plaintiff's father and uncles were undivided, it might have been presumed that the mortgage was on their behalf as well as on his own. But this the defendant had failed to do. The mortgage did not purport to have been made by the plaintiff's father as manager of the family, nor did it appear that the plaintiff's uncle and consins claimed any interest in the equity of redemption. The mere fact of their relationship gave them no interest in it. RAGHO VINAYAK v. DAUD I. L. R., 13 Bom., 51

several mortgagors—Adverse possession—Limitation.—The plaintiff sought to recover his father's share in two portions of family property, one of which had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's father and the father of the defendant No. 1 jointly; the other had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's father jointly with the father of defendant No. 1 and the husband of defendant No. 2. The first was redeemed by the father of defendant No. 1 alone in 1868; the second was redeemed by the defendant No. 1 more than twelve years before the suit. The parties were Mahomedans, and the plaintiff had a brother and three sisters, only one of whom (defendant No. 2) was a party to the suit. Defendant No. 1 contended that the suit was defective for want of parties, and that it was time-barred. The Subordinate Judge awarded the plaintiff's claim. The Assistant Judge on appeal held that the plaintiff's brothers and sisters were necessary parties, but that it was too late to join them, the suit with regard to them having become barred by limitation. He therefore dismissed the suit. On second appeal,—Held by the High Court that all persons interested in a property, which it is sought to redeem or recover on payment of a charge, are necessary parties, as otherwise the possessor may be exposed to many suits upon the same cause of action. Held also that the plaintiff's brother and sisters ought to have been joined as co-plaintiffs, the defendant No. 1's possession after redemption not being adverse to them. If it was adverse at all, it was adverse to the whole of the plaintiff's branch of the family, so as to bar the right of the group altogether. But that was no reason why the co-owners should not be admitted as co-plaintiffs, and the suit go on upon its merits. BHAUDIN v. ISMAIL . . . I. L. R., 11 Bom., 425

They again mortgaged the same property to X on the 23rd February 1884. On the 6th August 1885 A mortgaged a portion of the said property to Y. On the 12th August 1885 B mortgaged a portion of the same property to X. On the 21st August 1885 A mortgaged a portion of the same property to Z, and Z's mortgage was registered. On the 20th September 1886, A and B sold to X the property mortgaged to him, and with the proceeds of that sale X's three mortgages were paid off. On the 8th January 1887 Y sued A, B, and X for cancellation of the deed of sale of the 20th September 1886, and for sale of the property mortgaged to him under his deed of the 6th August 1885. Y did not make Z a party to this suit. He did not ask for redemption of X's mortgages nor for foreclosure of Z's mortgage. Held that, Z's mortgage of the 21st August 1885 having been registered, Y must be taken to have had notice of it, and, having had notice thereof, was bound to make Z a party to the suit for sale under his (Y's) mortgage. Damodar Dev Chand v. Registration of a subsequent mortgage is not necessarily any notice to a prior mortgagee of the existence of such subsequent mortgage; it being no part of a mortgagee's duty to be on the watch for incumbrances subsequent to his own. MATA DIN KASODHAN v. which on 25th February 1879 he settled K in patni with them, the bonus for the patni going to satisfy the mortgage debts. In 1885 a suit to which the present defendants were not made parties, was brought by the mortgagees of the bond of 5th January 1879 and, in execution of the decree in that suit K was put up for sale and purchased by the plaintiff on 21st June 1886. In a suit brought in 1890 against the defendants to set aside the patni and for khas possession of K, it was found that the plaintiff had notice of the patni. Held that the defendants as patnidars had an interest in K within the meaning of s. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act and should therefore have been made parties to the suit in 1885, and thereby given an opportunity of redeeming the mortgage on which that suit was brought. *Kokil Singh v. 147. ——— Suit for partition and to set aside order disallowing objection to attachment—Purchaser or mortgagee of a co-parcener's share.—In a partition suit all persons interested in the property to be divided must be brought before the Court. A purchaser or mortgagee of a co-parcener's share in the joint property is a proper, and even necessary, party to a suit for partition. A, B, and C were members of a joint Hindu family. In execution of a decree against B, a portion of the family property was attached. Thereupon A intervened and objected to the attachment so far as his own share was concerned. The objection was disallowed, and the property was brought to sale and purchased by D. A then filed a suit (1) to set aside the order in the miscellaneous proceedings disallowing his objection to the attachment; and (2) for a partition of the whole family property. In this suit he impleaded not only his co-sharers B and C, but also D, the auction-purchaser, and E, a mortgagee of B's share in the joint property. The Subordinate Judge, holding that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties as well as of causes of action, returned the plaint for amendment by striking out the prayer for partition. On appeal, this order was confirmed by the District Judge. On A's application to the High Court under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Held that the suit was not bad either for misjoinder of parties or for misjoinder of causes of action. Treating the suit as one for partition, the auction purchaser D and the mortgagee E were proper, and even necessary, parties. If A established his right to partition, he would be entitled to have the order in the miscellaneous proceedings set aside in the same suit. SADU BIN RAGHU v. RAM BIN GOVIND

Suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased partner.—The fact that surviving partners are made parties to an administration suit of the estate of a deceased partner does not of itself alone enable the Court to direct such surviving partners to render an account of the partnership estate. Surviving partners cannot be made co-defendants with the executors in such a suit merely by reason of their partnership. They can be made co-defendants in certain special cases as where the relation between the executors or administrators of the deceased partner and the surviving partners is such as to present a substantial impediment to the prosecution by the executors or administrators of the rights of the parties interested in the estate against the surviving partners. ELIAS v HUNOON MOOSHEER MOOSHEER Bourke, O. Plaintiffs.—Partnership-debt.—Suits by sole surviving partner.—Representatives of deceased partner.—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 45.—Civil Procedure Code s. 26.—The rule of English law that in trading partnerships although the right of a deceased partner devolves on his representative, the remedy survives to his co-partner who alone must enforce the right by action, and is liable on recovery to account to the representative for the deceased's share should be applied in India in the absence of statutory authority to the contrary. The effect of s. 45 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) is to extend the English law applicable to trading partnerships to all cases of partnership. There is nothing either in that section nor in s. 26 of the Civil Procedure Code read with it to show that the representatives of a deceased partner must be joined in an action for a partnership debt brought by the surviving partner though it may be that they might be joined in such an action. GORIND PRASAD v CHANDAR SEKHAR 1 L. of 1869 s. 31—In a suit for rent where an intervenor on his own account who pleads a deposit in Court made under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 is made a defendant by the Court the fact of his being a defendant does not give rise to any equity as between the plaintiff and the other defendants so as to allow them to have the advantage of s. 31 Bengal Act VIII of 1869 although if the intervenor had been sued jointly with the other defendants they might have had the benefit of it GIRDHAREE LALL SINGH PASRAY & CHUNDER PERSHAD

—In a suit for rent, an intervenor who claims to have acquired a share of the property for which the rent is claimed may be made a defendant at the discretion of the Court. party, and alleges that he holds under and pays rent to him such third party ought not to be made a party to the suit so as to convert a simple suit for arrears of rent into one for the determination of the title to the property in respect of which the rent is claimed. Such a suit raises only two issues, viz.—(1) Does the relation of landlord and tenant exist between the plaintiff and defendant? (2) Are the alleged arrears of rent due and unpaid? And these are questions in which the plaintiff and defendant are alone concerned and no third party claiming a title adverse to the plaintiff can properly be made a party to the trial of these issues. S. 28 of the Civil Procedure Code is not imperative, but allows a discretion to be exercised and in such a suit it is better, both in the interests of Government and for the proper adjudication of the question of title, that it should be tried by a competent Court in a suit directly framed and brought for that purpose LODAI MOLLAH & KALTY DASS ROY in rent suits.—Where Act X of 1869 s. 77 was no longer in force the effect of adding a party under Act VIII of 1859 s. 73 in a rent suit was the same as in any other kind of suit. Whatever be the class of suit the party added cannot raise an issue which would entirely change the nature and scope of the suit, the Court being bound to limit its inquiry to the issues necessary in order to try the plaintiff's right to the special relief sought—e.g. where the relief sought is the recovery of arrears of rent the intervenor is competent to raise all questions whether of title or otherwise which bear upon the issue, is the plaintiff entitled to recover the rent claimed? TILLESUREE KOORER & ABMEDH KOORER

Rent Act (XII of 1881), s. 148—Landholder and tenant—Suit for rent where the right to receive it is disputed—Third person who has received rent made party—Jurisdiction of Rent Court to pass decree for rent against such party—Question of title.*—In a suit by a landholder for recovery of rent, the defendants pleaded that they had paid the rent to a co-sharer of the plaintiff. The co-sharer made a deposition, in which he alleged that he was entitled to the rent not only as a co-sharer, but also as the appointed agent of the plaintiff. The Court thereupon made him a party to the suit under s. 148 of the Rent Act, and passed a joint decree against him and the tenants for rent. Held that the Court was justified in making him a party under s. 148 of the Rent Act, but was not competent to pass a decree for rent against him. A party, who is brought in under s. 148 of the Rent Act, cannot be made subject to the decree for rent so as to allow execution to be taken out against him, whether his bona fide receipt and enjoyment of the rent is proved or not. The only person against whom such a decree can be passed is the tenant. Madho Prasad v. Ambar, I. L. R., 5 All., 593, referred to. Per EDGE, C.J.—Seemle—That the intention of the Legislature in allowing a third person who claims under s. 148 of the Rent Act to be made a party to the suit may possibly have been that, by bringing him in, he may be bound by a declaration in the suit that he had, in fact, received the rent, so as to prevent him in the civil suit from denying the fact that he had received it. In a suit by a landholder for recovery of rent in which a third person alleged to have received such rent is made a party under s. 148 of the N. W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), the question of title to receive the rent cannot be determined between the plaintiff and such person, but can only be litigated and determined in a subsequent suit in the Civil Court. The only question between the plaintiff and the person so made a party which can be determined in the Rent Court under s. 148 is the actual receipt and enjoyment of the rent. *GOBIND RAM v. Whilst this suit was pending, certain parties intervened and asked to be made parties under s. 73, Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that plaintiff's vendors were not entitled to the full share claimed, as they themselves had purchased a portion thereof. Held that the Court exercised a wise and proper discretion in allowing the intervenors to be made parties, for a decree in plaintiffs' favour, though not legally binding on them, would nevertheless have caused them great difficulty in all matters of rent. *SALIGRAM SINGH v. The contract contained a covenant on the part of the plaintiff to build a temple and to secure an annuity to the vendor and his wife. On the 21st of the same month the first defendant sold and conveyed the same house to the second defendant and put him in possession. The other defendants were sureties for C P B. A suit was brought in the Court of the Deputy Collector against those who were actually in possession of the land, together with the sureties, for arrears of rent. It did not appear from the lease how far each defendant was interested in or entitled under it. Held by both Judges that the suit should be dismissed as against the sureties, who could not as such be sued under Act X of 1859. *ROY PRIYANATH CHOWDHRY v. In 1884 A alone advanced moneys on the security of usufructuary mortgages which were likewise taken in the name of B. A died leaving three sons, of whom the plaintiffs were two. The plaintiffs, having become divided from their brother, now brought suits in 1894 against B and the mortgagors for a declaration of their rights to the mortgages and for possession of the documents and for rent of the land which had been collected by B. It appeared that there had been no denial of the plaintiff's rights before 1889, that no rent had been collected for several years before suit, the mortgagors who had remained in possession as lessees after the execution of the mortgages having refused to attorn to B. Held that the suits were not bad for the non-joinder of the plaintiffs' brother. *MAHABALA BHATTA v. 211. ————— Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 56—Suit by two out of eleven beneficiaries for possession of trust property—Maintainability of suit—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 271.—Two daughters of a testator sued defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the testator's sons and his administrators with the will annexed, and other defendants, for a declaration that certain properties devised by the testator to be held in trust and the rents divided among his eleven children were trust properties, and to recover possession thereof. A decree had been obtained against plaintiff No. 2 and her right, title, and interest in the trust property brought to sale. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had filed a suit to set aside the sale, but afterwards compromised it on the terms that the sale should be cancelled on payment of a certain sum by defendant No. 1, but that, in default of such payment, the decree should take effect. Default having been made, the property was sold. Held (by the whole Court) that the decree of the Court below awarding the plaintiffs possession of the whole property on behalf of themselves and the other beneficiaries must be reversed. Per BODDAM, J.—That the alienations made in pursuance of the compromise entered into by the administrators were binding upon the plaintiffs, and that therefore neither of them had any cause of action. Per O'FARRELL, J.—That under all the circumstances the suit could not be treated as a suit to recover the plaintiffs' shares of the trust property. Per SUMRAMANIA AYYAR, J. (dissentiente).—The fact that the plaintiffs had asked for a larger relief than they were entitled to did not warrant the dismissal of the suit altogether; and that the suit fell within the class of cases in which relief against a third party is such as a Court of equity will administer, and a cestui qui trust may be entitled to sue the trustees

The last part of the prayer was withdrawn. The mortgages were executed to secure a decree-debt, the decree having been passed ex-parte against the late karnavan of the tarwad. No fraud was alleged, but the lower Courts found that the karnavan had been guilty of fraud in allowing the decree to be passed ex-parte. The plaintiffs had not been parties to the decree, and the other junior members of the tarwad, who had been joined, were exempted from liability. Held per curiam—All the members of the plaintiffs' tarwad should have been joined actually or constructively under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code. MOIDIN KUTTI v. KRISHNAN that the plaintiffs, who claimed on behalf of other fishermen of the village, should have proceeded under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Held that the objection was a good one; but, inasmuch as it was still open to the defendants to establish their right by a regular suit, the irregularity in the present suit was not such as to call for the exercise of the powers of the High Court under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. 226. ————— Joint suit by persons who have a common cause of action—Declaratory decree—Denial of right—Perpetual injunction—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 42 and 54.—The plaintiffs were the hereditary gors or priests, residing at Dakor, who ordinarily conducted their yajmans or patrons to the temple of Shri Ranchhod Raiji, performed worship there on their behalf, and received remuneration for their services. The defendants were the shevaks or ministers of the idol; it was their duty to remain in constant attendance on the idol, perform the daily services at the temple, collect the offerings, and apply the same to the purposes of the foundation. On 12th October

1883 the shevaks issued rules prohibiting people from entering the Nij Mandir and Saja Mandir, which were particularly sacred chambers in the temple, except on payment of certain fees. Every visitor was required to purchase a ticket of admission to the interior parts of the temple. The plaintiffs thereupon sued for a declaration of their right of free access to the Nij Mandir and Saja Mandir at all times and on all occasions when the temple was open for purposes of public worship. They alleged that the new rules framed by the shevaks constituted an infringement of their immemorial rights of going into the said mandirs without any let or hindrance of worshipping the idol there for themselves and their patrons and of receiving whatever their patrons gave them. They therefore sought for a perpetual injunction restraining the shevaks from interfering with their rights. The plaintiffs were 203 in number. Thirteen of them obtained leave to bring the suit on behalf of themselves and the rest under s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act IV of 1882). The defendants contended inter alia that the plaintiffs had each a separate cause of action, that they had no right to sue jointly, that they were not entitled to a declaratory decree under s. 12 of the Specific Relief Act, and that the plaintiffs, never having been obstructed in the exercise of their rights had no cause of action. Held that the suit was rightly constituted under s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The rules made by the shevaks in 1883 interfered with the immemorial rights of the gors, and gave a common cause of action to all the plaintiffs. They were therefore entitled to sue jointly. Held also that the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaratory decree under s. 43 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), as their title to free access with their patrons to the sacred shrines and to receive presents from their patrons unfettered by the rules of 1883 was denied by those rules. Held also that the plaintiffs were entitled to further relief by way of perpetual injunction under s. 54 of 1877, as the defendants had threatened to invade their enjoyment of property, and the invasion was such that pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief. Held also that the shevaks had no authority to issue the rules of the 12th October 1883 or to levy fees from worshippers in respect of any public religious services held in the temple. HALLIDAS JIVRAM v. 227 — Suit to remove a mohant—"Numerous parties"—The "numerous parties" mentioned in s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure mean parties capable of being ascertained. Two plaintiffs instituted a suit on behalf of themselves and 42 other persons named in a schedule to the plaint against a mohant of an akhra to have certain alienations of property belonging to the idol set aside, and the mohant removed on the ground that he was wasting the idol's property and setting up an adverse title to it, and to have another mohant and trustee of the property appointed in his place. plaintiffs alleged that they and the 42 others named in the schedule were in the habit of worshipping the idol or of contributing to the worship and expenses of it but it was clearly established by the evidence that any Hindu who chose was at liberty to give puja or render service and worship and that others than the plaintiffs and the 42 persons named in fact did so, and that the plaintiffs and the persons named were therefore not the only persons interested in the suit. The plaintiffs applied for and obtained leave to institute the suit under the provisions of s. 30 of the Code. A decree having been made in their favour, on appeal—Held that the suit was not one to which the provisions of s. 30 were applicable as the persons interested therein not being the whole Hindu community, were incapable of ascertainment. SAJEDUR RAJA v. declaration and injunction in connection with such removal, the plaintiffs were seven persons claiming relief as the panch or committee representing the whole community, and also in their individual capacity. It was found by the Court that the plaintiffs did not constitute the panch, and that they did not in that character represent the community. Held that s. 26 of the Civil Procedure Code (1882) was only an enabling section, it allowed the plaintiffs to bring a joint action, and should not be read as though all persons of the community must be joined as plaintiffs. Held also that s. 30 of the Code is an enabling section, and did not debar the plaintiffs from suing in their own right in this case. BAIJU LAL PARBATIA v. Notice had not been given to the other worshippers, nor had leave of the Court been obtained prior to the institution of the suit. Held that the suit was maintainable notwithstanding that the Advocate-General had not been joined as a party; that s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure being permissive and not prohibitive and dealing with procedure only, and not affecting substantive rights, the omission to state in the plaint that the suit was instituted on behalf of other worshippers having similar rights to sue as the plaintiffs was not fatal to the maintainability of the suit; that the Court was competent, with a view of adjudicating completely and definitively on the matter in dispute, to require an amendment of the plaint, and that the suit need not necessarily be dismissed; that the omission to apply for leave under s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not in itself ground for dismissing a suit, but, on objection being taken, the suit should not be allowed to proceed except on the terms of the plaint being amended and the requisite leave being obtained; and that the granting of leave under s. 30 is not a condition precedent, and may take place after the institution of the suit. Jan Ali v. The mortgagors having made default in payment of the rent, and N refusing to join in a suit against the mortgagors to enforce payment, B sued them alone for a moiety of the rent due. The Revenue Court of first instance held, with reference to s. 106 of Act XVIII of 1873, that B could not sue separately. Held by the High Court that the order of the Revenue Court of first appeal directing, inter alia, that the Court of first instance should re-try the suit after making N a defendant in the suit, was not illegal, notwithstanding that the provisions of s. 32 of Act X of 1877 were not made applicable to the procedure of the Revenue Court by Act XVIII of 1873. SHIB GOPAL v. The three brothers at the hearing expressed their willingness that A should sue alone. Held that such assent did not obviate the necessity of joining all the proper parties as co-plaintiffs, and that the suit therefore, as

254. ———— Suit by members of joint Hindu family carrying on business in partnership—Joint co-contractors.—Two of the sons out of a joint Mitakshara family, consisting of a father and three sons and the widow and sons of a deceased son, and carrying on business in partnership, sued to recover money due on a hathchitta, dated the 11th December 1876; the last payment made and entered by the defendant being on the 20th July 1877. No time was fixed for payment of the money, so that it became payable on the date of the hathchitta. The suit was instituted on the 19th July 1880, and came on for hearing on the 26th July, when an objection was taken that all the parties who ought to sue were not on the record. On the application of the original plaintiffs, the names of the father and the third son were then added, and the plaintiffs were described as surviving partners of the deceased son. At the time the additional plaintiffs were made parties, the suit was, as regards them, barred by limitation. Held that the additional plaintiffs were rightly made parties to the suit, notwithstanding that the suit was, as far as they were concerned, barred. In actions of contract it is the right of the defendant, if he takes the objection in proper time, to insist upon all the persons with whom he contracted being joined as plaintiffs; and if, after the objection has been raised, the plaintiff proceeds with the suit without taking steps to add the person or persons whose non-joinder has been objected to, and the Court finds that the objection is well founded, the suit must be dismissed. Held that, inasmuch as the original plaintiffs could only enforce their claim in conjunction with the added plaintiffs, and the added plaintiffs were barred by s. 22 of Act XV of 1877, the claim of the original plaintiffs was also barred. Boydonth Bag v. Grish Chunder Roy, I. L. R., 3 Calc., 26, dissented from. There is no equity, but often much injustice, in allowing one joint contractor out of many to sue a defendant, notwithstanding an objection duly made by the latter; and the Court has no right to allow one contractor to recover under such circumstances, though he may, no doubt, afterwards adjust the sum which he recovers with his co-contractors. RAM-SHEBUK v. On appeal, Held that a co-heir is entitled to follow property of the deceased into the hands of any person who has misappropriated it, and such right is not taken away by the certificate. Therefore, any person who, with the consent of the holder of the certificate, has improperly possessed himself of property belonging to the deceased, and misappropriated it, may be joined as a co-defendant. The defendants, in their written statement, contended that there was no privity of contract between themselves and the plaintiffs, and denied the alleged agency of A D. The plaintiffs, before the hearing, applied to the Court to have A D added as a party defendant under ss 28 and 32 of Act X of 1877, asking to be allowed to amend their plaint so as to pray for relief in the alternative against the original defendants or the said A D, or both against the original defendants and the said A D. Held that under s 28 they were entitled to the order on the authority of the case of *Child v Stenning, L. In their written statement the defendants alleged that A had obtained the decree in question by fraud. Shortly before the present suit, V had mortgaged the house to H for Rs3,000. About three weeks after the suit had been filed, H advanced a further sum of Rs5,000 to V on the same security, and on the same day (12th December 1881) entered into an agreement with V, by which he agreed to buy the house for Rs45,000, the sale to be completed immediately after the decision of the present suit. The agreement provided that V should defend the suit; but, if the result of the suit should be to establish the plaintiff's right to seize the house in execution, then that H should be at liberty to cancel the contract of sale. Subsequently V wrote to H declaring his intention of abandoning his defence. H thereupon applied to be made a defendant to the suit, in order to protect the house from the plaintiff. Held that H was entitled to be made a party under ss. 32 and 372 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). AHMEDBOY HUMBHOY v. The sale was opposed, under s. 246, Civil Procedure Code, 1859, by R, a son of B, whose claim was summarily rejected, and K's rights were bought by one A. R then brought a suit within one year to set aside the sale, and to have his own title declared. The suit was against the purchaser and against the representatives of the zur-i-peshgidars; but on the petition of L, one of M's heirs, her name was added to the list of defendants. The first Court gave R a decree, but the lower Appellate Court found that his claim was barred by limitation against L, on the ground of non-possession within twelve years, and in respect of the zur-i-peshgidar because K's decree had lapsed by delay in execution. Held that L was interested in the result of the suit, and the lower Courts committed no error in law in admitting her to be a defendant under s. 73, Civil Procedure Code, 1859. RAM SURUN SINGH v.  The District Munsif passed a decree for the plaintiff, passed a decree directing that the plaintiff should first proceed against all the property which was not subject to the hypothecation to defendant No 3 including the share of defendant No 2. Defendant

 No. 2 preferred a second appeal joining all the other parties. Held that though both defendants Nos. 2 decree they only made the plaintiff respondent and defendant No 3 omitted to make the appellant (defendant No 2) a party to his appeal but the relief prayed for in each appeal was that the original

There is no express provision for it in the sections relating to execution. Ss. 361 to 372 relate to changes during suit, and speak only of "plaintiffs" and "defendants"—terms which seem to show that they were only intended to apply to proceedings up to final determination by the appellate decree and not to proceedings in execution between the judgment-creditor and

Two others in their written statement pleaded that the purchase had been made in fraud of their rights and claimed to be still entitled to their shares in the mita on the ground that the purchaser must be held to have purchased for their benefit (Indian Trusts Act, 1832, s 90). They further claimed that should the sale be set aside so far as the plaintiffs' interests were concerned, the sale of their interests also should be held to be null and void. On receipt of the agreement, the Subordinate Judge issued notices to the parties to show cause why the agreement should not be filed, and was, on the day of hearing, informed that the agreement could not be filed owing to plaintiff's death. The agreement was then returned to the conciliator, who entered therein the name of the deceased plaintiff's heir and forwarded it to the Subordinate Judge. A question having thereupon arisen as to whether the conciliator could enter on the record the name of the heir of the deceased plaintiff, —Held that, although there is no provision in the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act empowering a conciliator to enter the name of the heir of a party, and Government have not apparently under s. 49 (a) of the Act made any rules regulating the procedure before conciliators in this respect, yet when a Subordinate Judge is seized of a conciliation agreement, there is a proceeding before him under the Act. In the meantime, in a suit instituted by the beneficiaries against the trustees, a decree had been passed on the 5th April 1898, declaring that the beneficiaries were entitled to possession of the trust estate from the 13th April and directing the trustees to make over possession to them. This decree further directed that proper conveyances should be executed by the trustees when required. On the 5th July 1898, the beneficiaries applied for substitution of their names in the place of the trustees in the appeal filed on the 18th April. Held that, though the trustees were directed to execute proper conveyances when required, yet, having regard to the direction as to delivery of possession, the decree of the 5th April must be taken to have divested the property out of the trustees and vested it in the beneficiaries. The trustees therefore had not any estate left in them on the 18th April sufficient to justify their being appellants. That the beneficiaries can only be substituted in place of the trustees if they can bring the case within s. 5 of the Limitation Act. Where therefore a respondent dies during the pendency of an appeal, it is for the appellant to take the initiative, and he is at liberty to select one or more persons to defend the appeal; and no person other than the person so selected has a right to force himself into the proceedings and to claim to have his name entered as representative of the deceased respondent against the appellant's consent. Persons so introduced on the record may or may not be the real representatives of the deceased respondent; but the merits of their claim to be such, on the ground of any right or status, such as that of adoption, is immaterial to the determination of the appeal. LAKSHMIBAI v. s. 365 to apply to such a case, the Court had no power to make K a respondent jointly with H, but should have taken one or the other of the courses specified in s. 367, so as to determine who was the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff; and that the course adopted by the Court was an exceedingly inconvenient one, which ought not to have been taken, even if the Court had power under the Code to take it. The "questions involved in the suit," referred to in the second paragraph of s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, are questions between the plaintiff and the defendant, and not questions which may arise between co-defendants or co-plaintiffs inter se. Pending the appeal, the plaintiff died childless, and, on her application, his widow was substituted for him as respondent. Subsequently the defendants-appellants applied to the High Court to have the deceased's father brought upon the record as respondent, alleging that he, and not the widow, was the deceased's legal representative and solely entitled to be placed on the record as such. The father made no objection to the proposed substitution. It was common ground that either the father alone or the widow alone was the deceased plaintiff-respondent's true legal representative. Held by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting) that, having regard to the words "as nearly as may be" and "as far as may be" in s. 582 of the Civil Procedure Code, ss. 365, 366, and 367 might be applied, at all events analogically, to the case, so as to enable the real legal representative of the deceased plaintiff-respondent to be ascertained and brought upon the record; that the latter portion of s. 582 did not limit the earlier words of the section so as to make s. 368 the only provision applicable to the case; that a Court of record must have an inherent power to ascertain whether or not it has before it the proper parties to an appeal if the question be substantially raised; and that therefore the Court could and should, either before or at the hearing of the appeal, ascertain and determine, for the purposes of the prosecution of the appeal, the preliminary question whether the father or the widow was the legal representative of the deceased, and

Subsequently D applied to the High Court to be brought on the record as legal representative of the deceased; on the 15th April 1886 he was referred to a regular suit to establish his title as such representative, and on the 25th February 1887 such suit was dismissed. On 24th July 1888 they applied to the High Court to bring certain persons upon the record as the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff-respondent. Held that the application, having been made subsequent to the 1st July 1888, when the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (VII of 1888) came into force, and being an entirely fresh application not in continuation of any former proceedings between the same parties, must be dealt with under that Act, and not under the Civil Procedure Code as it stood before the amendment, and that, as it was made more than six months after the

The Deputy Collector, without examining the general agent, dismissed the suit, on the ground that the suit ought to have been instituted by the general agent; and that the Rajah himself was bound to obey his citation. Held that the Deputy Collector was bound to receive the evidence of the general agent and to decide the case upon the evidence which was tendered; and that the refusal of the Rajah, who had the privilege which he claimed, and his appointment of a special agent or mukhtar for the purposes of the suit, instead of his general agent, were no grounds for dismissing the suit. JUGGUP INDUR BENWAREE v. There are partitions known as imperfect partitions depending upon the conduct of the parties, and effected from first to last only with their consent. MUNTADEE BEG v HOSSEIN ALI

2. ——— Informal partition—Partition by finding of Court in suit—Where plaintiff sued for certain land in dispute as his own and the lower Court found that it was his share and that defendant held his separately, no further formal partition was held to be necessary. MOHDOSOODEN CHATTERJEE v JEDDOOFETTY CHUCKERBUTTY

3. ——— Declaration of title to continue to enjoy separate possession of land—Suit for partition—The plaintiffs having obtained a declaration of title to continue to enjoy separate possession of certain lands, sued the former defendants again for partition of the same lands. Held that the suit was unnecessary, and should be dismissed. ANDI v THATHA

7. ——— Right to subsequent partition under Act XIX of 1863—Where an estate was divided by private agreement more than fifty years ago, and the division was subsequently maintained in a judicial decision, since which the co-sharers had for many years exercised rights of ownership independently of each other, a butwarra of the whole estate cannot afterwards be demanded, even though a regular separation of one share has been intermeddledly obtained by a suit in a Civil Court. PERMESSEER DUTT SAHAI v ARDH SAHA JEE

9. ———— Beng. Reg. XIX of 1814, s. 30—Power of Collector—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—It is not correct to say that, under s. 30 of Regulation XIX of 1814, the Collector is not at liberty to make any partition where the owners have already partitioned the lands amongst themselves. The true meaning of the section is that the Collector must be guided by the nature of the estate in applying the rules contained in the preceding sections of the Regulation; and that, where estates are not held in common tenancy, only a portion of those rules will apply. If the parties have divided the lands without agreeing as to the shares of the Government revenue to be paid by them, respectively, all the Collector has to do, when a partition has been applied for, is to make an assignment of the revenue in proportion to the interest of each shareholder. If they have divided the lands and arranged amongst themselves as to the portion of the Government revenue which each is to pay, it is open to the Collector to accept or reject that arrangement. The Civil Court has nothing to do with the matter. AJOODHIA LALL v. GUMANI LALL

11. ———— Family arrangement among co-sharers—Partition among shareholders in zamindari villages—Construction of agreement—Custom.—On a dispute among proprietors of shares in zamindari villages as to the respective amounts of the holdings till then undivided, to which they were entitled, a compromise made by their common ancestor's five sons, of whom the plaintiff's father was the eldest, had been filed in proceedings prior to this suit. This was construed to have assigned to the plaintiff's father an additional share, according to a custom recorded in the khewat at settlement, in virtue of which the eldest brother was entitled to a share greater than that allotted to the others,—a right termed "hakh jetharnsi." *MANICK CHAND v. In 1818 a private partition took place between the co-sharers in the course of which certain specific lands were allotted to T in severalty, the rest remaining undivided. T granted a patni lease of

Held that the patnidars were properly made parties to the suits in order to try the question of the right to receive the rent as between the plaintiffs and the patnidars. Kashee Ram Dass v. Sham Mohinee, 23 W. R., 227; Ahamudeen v. Girish Chunder Shamunt, I. L. R., 4 Calc., 350; and Madan Mohan Lal v. Holloway, I. L. R., 12 Calc., 555, referred to. (1819) a fourteen-anna eight-gunda share of a certain mouzah was permanently settled. The remaining one-anna twelve-gunda share was permanently settled in 1861. This share was sold for arrears of Government revenue in 1873, and purchased by the plaintiff, who subsequently applied to the Collector for partition under the Batwarra Act. The Collector refused to partition, upon the ground that the Act was not applicable to the partition of a mouzah held jointly by the proprietors of two separate estates. The plaintiff then brought the present suit, to which he made the Collector a party, to obtain a declaration that he was entitled to have his share separated from the fourteen-anna eight-gunda share by metes and bounds, and also for a decree directing a partition of the whole mouzah into two parts. Held that, so far as the plaintiff on the one hand and the owners of the fourteen-anna eight-gunda share on the other were concerned, the mouzah could be partitioned, but that such partition would not be binding upon the Government unless by consent. AJOODHYA PERSAD v. 33 — Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 265—Revenue paying estate—Bengal Act VIII of 1876, Part II, and s. 4, cls (8) and (9)—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1892), s. 265—In 1851 an estate was brought under butwarra under the provisions of Regulation XIX of 1814. At such butwarra a portion of the estate being covered with water and unfit for cultivation was not divided, but left joint amongst all the co-sharers, the land revenue payable on account of the whole estate being apportioned amongst the several estates into which the portion divided was split up. Subsequently, on the portion remaining joint becoming dry and fit for cultivation an application was made by one of the co-sharers to the Collector to partition the same under the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1876 but that officer refused to do so, on the ground that the land "did not bear an assessed revenue and was not shown in the towns." In a suit brought under the above circumstances to compel the Collector to make the partition and in the alternative to have it made by the Civil Court,—Held that, though the reason given by the Collector for refusing was an erroneous one, he was not bound to make the partition under the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1876 as the land in suit was not liable for the payment of one and the same demand of land revenue, and was therefore not a joint undivided estate within the terms of s. 4 cl (9), of that Act. Held also that the word "estate" as used in s. 265 of the Civil Procedure Code must not be construed in the same limited and defective sense in which it is used in Act VIII of 1876, but must be taken to be there used in its ordinary signification, and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for partition under the provisions of that section. Chundernath Dundy v Hur Narain Deb I.L.R., 7 Cal., 153 approved.

This decree was transferred for execution to the Collector, who sold the land and rateably distributed the proceeds except to F, who declined to take the amount tendered as his share. The plaintiff sued F and the purchasers under R's decree to recover his mortgage debt by a sale of the property mortgaged to him. There is nothing in the butwarra law or in any other Regulation to prevent the Civil Court from entertaining a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to a larger share than that recorded in his name in the paper of partition. The Collector left the parties to settle the matter between themselves, and A brought a suit against B for his claim in the Civil Court. Held that, in a case of this kind, the only principle that can be adopted is that the Court should ascertain the relative value of the lands originally made over by the defendant to the entire lands of the defendant, and that it should assign, out of the present share of the defendant, lands bearing the same relative value to the whole that the former lands bore this to be done without interference with the proceedings of the Collector under the butwarra law, and the plaintiff (if successful) to be brought in as a co-sharer to a limited extent in the land assigned by the defendant OOMA DUTT CHOWDHRY v. 93. ——— Dwelling-house belonging to undivided family—Partition Act (IV of 1893), s. 4—Application of section—Re-acquisition by members of such family after it has been sold to a stranger does not give any right under the section as against such stranger.—A dwelling-house belonged to four brothers, K, R, V, and P, joint members of a Hindu family. In 1874 the shares of K and P were sold in execution of decrees against them, and in 1877 the remaining shares were sold, and finally the house became the property of the plaintiff and one A in equal moieties. The plaintiff sued A for partition and obtained a decree, but pending execution A conveyed his moiety back again to K and V. The brothers had continued to occupy the house notwithstanding the changes in ownership. V now applied under s. 4 of the Partition Act (IV of 1893) to be allowed to buy the plaintiff's moiety. Held that he was not entitled to the advantage given by the section. It is ownership, not occupation, that gives the right. After the sales in 1877, the house no longer belonged to an undivided family. V and his brothers were then either tenants in the house or trespassers. The question was whether the dwelling-house at the time the shares therein, which had not been sold to A, were transferred to the plaintiff belonged to an undivided family. When the plaintiff purchased his moiety, he and A became the owners in common of the house, and as between them s. 4 of the Partition Act had no operation. The subsequent purchase of A's interest by R and V did not confer upon them any rights which A did not possess. It was in their hands re-acquired ancestral property, but not property belonging to an undivided family within the meaning of s. 4. VAMAN VISHNU GOKHALE v. VASUDEV MORBHAT KALE and other sharers on partition.—Where the owner of an undivided share in a joint and undivided estate mortgages his undivided share, he cannot by so doing affect the interests of the other sharers, and the persons who take the security, i.e., the mortgagees, take it subject to the right of those sharers to enforce a partition and thereby convert what is an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty. Where such a partition is effected under the provisions of Regulation XIX of 1814 before the mortgagees have completed their title by foreclosure and the consequential decree for possession, the mortgagees of the undivided share of one co-sharer who has no priority of contract with the other co-sharers would have no recourse against the lands allotted to such co-sharers, but must pursue their remedy against the lands allotted to the mortgagor, and, as against him, would have a charge on the whole of such lands. *BYJNATH LALL v. The defence was that the principle of an implied grant of easement upon severance of the tenement should not be applied to the case, but that the rights of the parties should be determined solely with reference to the decree made in the partition suit. Held that the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience should be applied to the case, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the right claimed, even in the absence of any express provision in the decree reserving such right. Quare—Whether the principle of an implied grant of easement in severance of tenements would apply in the case where the partition was effected by a decree of the Court in a contested suit and not by a consent of parties. *KADAMBINI DEBI v. of such co sharer—Partition re-opened—Fraud of mortgagor and mortgagee—Four brothers viz D, L, B, and P, were joint owners of certain land. For purposes of convenience, each was in possession of a certain portion, but there was no formal partition. The particular land in question in this suit (plots Nos 1 and 2 of Survey No 174) was a part of the land in possession of B. In 1867 without the knowledge of his brothers B mortgaged these plots of land to the first defendant for Rs 50. In 1886 D sued for partition of the whole property, and in 1891 L brought a similar suit. By the decrees in these suits plot No 1 was allotted to D and plot No 2 was awarded to L. The mortgagee was not a party to either suit the plaintiffs in these suits (as found by the High Court) having had no notice of the mortgage. D and L, on attempting to get possession of the lands allotted to them respectively by the partition decrees were obstructed by the mortgagee, unencumbered land should be allotted to them and the mortgaged land given to B's branch of the family (defendants Nos 3-9). Held that the partition should be re-opened and the mortgaged land assigned to the defendants Nos 2-9. Where a co-sharer of joint property has mortgaged his share without the knowledge of his co-sharers and there has subsequently been a partition suit to which, through the fraud of the mortgagor and the mortgagee, the latter has not been made a party, he (the mortgagee) will only be allowed to proceed for the recovery of his mortgage-debt against that portion of the property which has been allotted to his mortgagor. Hem Chunder Ghose v Thako Mont Debi 1 L R., 20 Calc., 533 approved. LAKSHMAN v GOPAL [L L R., 23 Bom., 385]

By the decree for partition the plot of land under the lease was allotted to the plaintiff who brought the present suit to recover possession of the piece of land on the ground that he was not bound by the lease. Held that s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to cases where the shares of the parties and their rights to those shares are not disputed. The mode in which the lands should be allotted between the ascertained sharers does not affect the right to any specific property. Held also that the tenant, not having been a party to the partition suit, was not bound by the decree, and the plaintiff was only entitled to khas possession of the one-third share of the plot leased out by his co-sharers. KHAN ALI v. to share of another co-sharer—Lis pendens—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52.—Plaintiff purchased a one-third share in an undivided estate and brought a suit for partition. During the pendency of the partition suit, the defendants, the two remaining co-sharers, granted a lease of a particular plot of land included in the undivided estate to the present defendant. By the decree for partition the plot of land under the lease was allotted to the plaintiff who brought the present suit to recover possession of the piece of land on the ground that he was not bound by the lease. Held that s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to cases where the shares of the parties and their rights to those shares are not disputed. The mode in which the lands should be allotted between the ascertained sharers does not affect the right to any specific property. Held also that the tenant, not having been a party to the partition suit, was not bound by the decree, and the plaintiff was only entitled to khas possession of the one-third share of the plot leased out by his co-sharers. KHAN ALI v. 8. EFFECT OF PARTITION.

104. ——— Decree for partition—Nature and effect of decree in partition suit.—A decree for partition is not like a decree for money or the delivery of specific property which is only in favour of the plaintiff in the suit. It is a joint declaration of the rights of persons interested in the property of which partition is sought, and such a decree, when properly drawn up, is in favour of each shareholder or set of shareholders having a distinct share. KHOORSHED HOSSEIN v. NUBBEA FATIMA [I. L. R., 3 Calc., 551; 2 C. L. R., 187]

109. ——— Extinguishment of title—Effect of partition on others than allottees.—The allotment of land to one person by partition extinguishes another's right altogether; his subsequent possession is either that of a trespasser or a tenant-at-will; his dispossession is not illegal, and he has no legal right of suit for recovery of possession. NOWAB BEGUM v. RUSTUM KHAN . . . 2 Agra, 149

110. ——— Effect of partition among co-sharers.—By partition a co-sharer's proprietary right to the land which has fallen in another putti becomes extinguished, and he becomes a mere cultivator in respect to that land and liable to rent. ZALIM RAI v. DOORGA RAI

[1 Agra, Rev., 69]

111. ——— Extinguishment of rights—Tenant rights, Effect of partition on.—A butwarra does not extinguish rights of tenants, and the mere circumstance that one of the proprietors of the estate was himself the tenant does not destroy his tenant right, because another of the proprietors has had the land allotted as part of his share of the divided estate. NUTHOO LALL CHOWDHRY v. SAA-DAT LALL . . . W. R., 1864, 271

112. ——— Co-sharers—Raiyati and proprietary rights.—Plaintiffs sued their co-heirs to recover huq-clagaun,—that is, the half share of the produce of trees planted on a portion of the land by their ancestor before his death,—on the ground that, although by a butwarra entered into by the heirs the trees fell to the share of the defendants, plaintiffs were entitled as succeeding to the raiyati rights of the person who planted them. Held that, as the ancestor was the only proprietor, his heirs were co-proprietors, and the butwarra was a division of the proprietary right; and that no raiyati right existed. AMEERUN v. SUNJEEDA . . . 11 W. R., 226

113. ——— Proprietary right in sir land.—When an estate in which the proprietors have sir land is partitioned, such partition among the co-sharers is no way affected by any cultivating rights which may be possessed by cultivators not co-sharers in the estate; but it is also a well-understood effect and consequence of partition that co-sharers retain no right of occupancy in respect of any sir land which may have passed under the partition into the share of other co-sharers, as a sir-hold proprietor has no cultivating right distinct from, and independent of, his proprietary character. When, therefore, by partition he loses his proprietary title to any particular land, any cultivating right which he had in virtue of his proprietary character necessarily ceases. AMAN SINGH v. Subsequently, on the application of the parties, the Collector made a regular partition, by which two bighas of the mokurari land were allotted to the other sharers, who refused to recognize the grantee's mokurari rights for that portion of the land, contending that, as under the private partition all the 4 bighas were in the share of the grantor, the loss of rent should be on him, and that the Collector's butwarra could not transfer 2 bighas with the mokurari or smaller rental to the other sharers. Held that the grantor's mokurari title could not be got rid of by the butwarra, and that he was entitled to recognition by the other sharers. AHMEDULLAH v ASHRAFF HOSSAIN

In the meantime A had granted a mokurari to B in respect of the land allotted to him under the private partition. Held that, although the co-sharers must be taken to have consented to the redistribution, yet A could not by his consent affect the right of B, his mokurari dar. Bujnath Lal v Ramoolen Chowdhry, L. The rent of the tenure was thereupon allotted proportionately to each of the four estates thus formed, although the land forming the tenure remained undivided. In a suit for enhancement of the rent of the tenure brought by the proprietor of some of the estates, — Held that the effect of the partition of the parent estate was to create separate and distinct tenures out of the original single tenure under the proprietors of each of the estates, that the proprietors of the several estates were not joint landlords of the tenure within the meaning of s. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that therefore a suit for enhancement of rent would lie by a proprietor of one of the estates in respect of the rent allotted to his estate. Sarat Soonduree Debia v Someerodeen Talookdar, 23 W. The defendant pleaded twelve years' adverse possession, and that he was entitled to retain possession on payment of rent, as the lands were occupied by gardens made by his ancestor. Held that s. 9, Regulation XIX of 1814, did not apply to the lands made over to the plaintiff under the butwarra ; that section referring to the dwelling-houses of co-sharers, and to offices, buildings, and ground immediately attached to those dwelling-houses, which the lands in suit were not proved to be. LULEET NARAIN v. 128. ——— Order for partition by Assistant Collector confirmed by Collector—Objection subsequently made to mode of partition—Question of title—N. W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), s. 113.—Upon an application made under s. 108 of the N. W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873) for partition of a share in a mehal, no question of title or proprietary right of the nature contemplated by s. 113 was raised, nor any serious objection made by any of the co-sharers, and the Assistant Collector recorded a proceeding setting forth the rules which were to govern the partition, and this proceeding was confirmed by the Collector under s. 138. An Amin was ordered to carry out the partition, and, in taking steps to do so, stated the principle upon which he proposed to distribute the common land. An objection was then for the first time raised by two of the co-sharers in the Court of the Assistant Collector to the inclusion of a particular piece of land in the partition, on the ground that it appertained exclusively to their share. This objection was disallowed by the Assistant Collector, and, on appeal, by the District Judge. Held that, at the stage of the proceedings when objections were taken, it was too late to determine questions of title under s. 113 of the Act ; that accordingly the Assistant Collector could not be said to have done so ; that the objections could therefore only be regarded in the light of objections to the mode in which it was proposed to make the partition, and that consequently there was no appeal from the order of the Assistant Collector to the District Judge or from the District Judge to the High Court. TOTA RAM v. This application was struck off, and a second application was made on the 23rd July 1888. The arbitrator then declined to act, and the application was struck off. The present application was made on the 1st August 1891, and an objection was raised that, more than three years having elapsed from the date of the previous application, the present one was barred under art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act. The lower Court of appeal held that art. 178, and not art. 179, applied to the case, but that, the plaintiff having applied within three years from the date when the arbitrator declined to act, the application was in time. Held, with reference to the provisions of s 336 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the application was not barred.

entered into an agreement in October 1873 to cause the said company to be wound up and to form a new company to take over its assets and liabilities, and to cause themselves to be appointed agents of the new company under the firm of V J S & Co., and under that name to act as agents of the new company, subject to the terms of the agreement. The agreement provided that the firm of V J S & Co. should take the agency of the new company for a period of thirty years, that of the profits to be derived by the said firm out of the agency V should receive 39 cents, J 31 cents, and S 30 cents, that in case of a vacancy in the firm of V J S & Co. caused by the death or retirement of any of the partners, the nominee of the dying or retiring partner should be admitted into partnership, and should receive the share of such partner, and should exercise all his authority. In pursuance of this agreement, the Great Eastern Spinning and Weaving Mills, Limited, was wound up, and a new company called "The New Great Eastern Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited" was formed and registered. Both the memorandum and articles of association of the said new company contained clauses providing that the firm of V J S & Co., or whatever member or members that firm for the time consist of, should be agents of the company so long as the said firm should carry on business in Bombay, or until they should resign. The will did not refer to the firm or nominate any successor in the partnership. In the present suit B as executrix claimed to be entitled to 60 cents or shares in the firm of V J S & Co. up to the date of the testator's death, and to a like share in the profits earned subsequently to his death, or to be earned by the firm so long as it continued to carry on the said

On the 17th June 1891, an agreement, of which the second defendant had notice, was entered into between the plaintiffs and first defendant to the effect that the first plaintiff should be the managing member of the family and should be entitled to receive the rent and give receipts for the same. Subsequently, disputes arising between plaintiff and first defendant, the other defendants made payments of rent to first defendant alone. Held that these payments were not a valid discharge as against the claim of the plaintiffs on its being proved that second defendant had notice of the agreement of the 17th June, and that notice to him must be taken to be notice to his partners, the other defendants. The leases were not signed by the 13th defendant (now represented by appellants 19, 20, and 21), who was admittedly a partner and took actual part in the management of the affairs of the firm after the leases were executed. Held that it was intended that the leases should operate as if all the members had executed them, and that the representatives of 13th defendant were bound. Liability of partners to account—Suit for an account.—Suit by partner to recover from co-partner share of losses and advances.—It is only in exceptional cases that a suit can be brought by one partner against another, which involves the taking of partnership accounts prior to dissolution. A suit was brought by the widow of a partner in an indigo concern against her deceased husband's co-partner in respect of certain alleged losses of the concern, and to recover a moiety of moneys expended by her husband in advances made to indigo cultivators on behalf of the partnership. At the time when the suit was brought, the partnership had not been dissolved. Held that, the partnership not having been dissolved, the plaintiff was not entitled to an account, and the suit must therefore fail. *Brown v. In a suit for contribution brought by one of the four members against the others, as having paid more than his share under the joint decrees, Held that the giving of the promissory notes was not a partnership transaction so as to debar the plaintiff from a suit for contribution without asking for an account of the partnership dealings. sums of money upon promissory notes, and paid the amounts so borrowed into the business. After the loan, the partnership business came to an end, but no account was settled. Afterwards decrees were obtained upon those promissory notes, and the plaintiff was obliged to pay up the decretal amounts. To a suit for contribution by the plaintiff, for money so paid, against the members of the firm, the defence, inter alia, was that the suit was not maintainable, in the absence of adjustment of the accounts relating to the firm. Held that the suit was maintainable, inasmuch as the money secured by the promissory notes did not become an item of the partnership account. Doyal Jayraj v. J., the plaintiff's father, and the defendant R. were partners in the firm of Hormusji and Rustumji which carried on business in China. In the year 1862 the firm of V. K. & Co. was largely indebted to the firm of Hormusji and Rustumji. At the end of that year the latter firm ceased to do business, but no formal dissolution of the partnership ever took place. In 1869 the defendant R. filed a suit (No. 161 of 1869) in the High Court of Bombay in his own name and that of H. J., his former partner, against the firm of V. K. & Co. for an account of the dealings of that firm with the firm of Hormusji and Rustumji, and by a decretal order dated 14th March 1870 the suit was referred to the Commissioner to take the accounts as prayed for. Defendant R ₹10,000 in 1878, and for the remaining ₹10,000 gave a promissory note payable in July or August 1881. The plaintiff took out letters of administration to his father H J, and brought this suit on 16th July 1880, claiming a moiety of the ₹10,000 already paid by the defendant W to the first defendant R, and praying that he might be declared entitled to a moiety of the remaining sum of ₹10,000 payable by the defendant W, and that the same might be paid over to him. The defendant R alleged that he had assigned the claim against the firm of N K & Co., to the defendant W, and had received the consideration for such assignment in February 1873, and contended that if the plaintiff had ever any claim to any portion of the said money (which he denied), such claim was barred by limitation. He also alleged that he had carried on the suit No. 461 of 1869 without any assistance from the plaintiff's father H J, or from the plaintiff, who, although applied to, refused to assist him, and he submitted that under no circumstances was the plaintiff entitled to any of the moneys claimed by him without giving credit to the defendant for his (plaintiff's) share of the expense of prosecuting the said suit, and for the amount of proper remuneration to be defendant for the time and labour bestowed by him in the said suit. He also claimed that the partnership accounts of the firm of Hormusji and Rustumji should be taken, and alleged that on such accounts being taken a large sum would be found due to him from the partnership. The second defendant V paid into Court the ₹10,000 due on the promissory note above mentioned, and was dismissed from the suit. At the hearing the Judge found that, of the other moiety of the consideration for the assignment of February 1873, a sum of ₹1,000 was paid by the defendant W to the defendant R on January 3, 1878, and a sum of ₹6,000 on September 13, 1879. Held that the suit was not barred by limitation in respect of the said sums of ₹1,000, ₹6,000, and ₹10,000, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover a half share of these sums from the defendant R, deducting all sums expended by the defendant in the prosecution of the suit No. 461 of 1869, no allowance, however, being made to him as remuneration for conducting the suit. Held also that the defendant might deduct the amount (if any) which might be found due to him on taking the partnership accounts, although a separate suit for such account would be barred by limitation. *MERWANJI FORMUSJI v. tory authority to the contrary. The effect of s. 45 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) is to extend the English law applicable to trading partnerships to all cases of partnership. 37. — Suit by assignee of executors of deceased partner—Suit for declaration of right to share of partnerships and for an account.—R, prior to his death, was a partner with defendants in the firm of N C & Co. He died on 8th November 1884. On the 9th November 1885, his executors passed a release to the defendants, which recited that R's share in the firm and future business had ceased on his death; that the surviving partners had requested the executors to settle the account of their testator with the firm, and that, after examining the books and taking accounts, etc., a balance of ₹8,395-11-0 was found due, on payment whereof the executors released the defendants from all claims in respect of the share and interest of R. On the 7th April 1887, the executors assigned over to the plaintiff a one-anna share in the said firm, and the plaintiff, as assignee, brought the suit for a declaration of his right to the share and for an account. He alleged that there had been no accurate examination of the books at the time of the release; that the amount really due to the testator's estate by the firm had not been ascertained; and that it had been agreed on by the partners, at the time of the release, that in addition to the sum therein mentioned, the executors, as representing the testator's estate, should receive a one-anna share in the partnership. Held on the evidence that it had not been proved that all the partners consented to the alleged new partnership, and that on this ground alone the plaintiff could not succeed in his suit. *COWASJI RUTTONJI LIMBOOWALLA v. The present suits were brought in 1891 by certain other partners, who were defendants in the suits of 1889, on the allegation that the partnership account had been already adjusted by the Amin appointed in the suits of 1889, and that the debts and dues of all parties had been determined by the Court. The plaintiffs prayed for recovery of the amount due to them under the Amin's adjustment and in the alternative, for such other relief as might be deemed proper by the Court to grant them against any of the defendants. Held by NORRIS and BAYNE, JJ. (RAMPIN, J. dissenting), that the suits were correctly framed, and that such defects as there were in the plaint, viz., an incorrect statement as to the dues of all the partners having been determined in the former suit, and the omission of an alternative prayer for an account, were no bar to the maintenance of the present actions. *Taylor v. B contended that A's claim being in respect of a partnership transaction, ought to be adjusted when the partnership account was settled, and that the suit did not lie. Held that the advance made by A to B by paying his share was not an advance to the partnership, but to the other partner in respect of what he had to contribute, and that consequently A was entitled to contribution from B. *DEBARATYU v. ——— Grazing—Bom Act I of 1865 s 32—
"Village cattle"—Plaintiff erected a hut on public ground in a village in the district of Thana and lived there annually for a few months while his cattle grazed on the public ground in that village. He was not the owner or lessee of any land in the village. On being prevented by the Collector of Thana from thus grazing his cattle, plaintiff brought a suit against that officer for a declaration of his right to graze his cattle within the limits, not only of that village, but of any other village in the district of Thana. Held that plaintiff was not entitled to any such right. The phrase "village cattle" in s 32 of Bombay Act I of 1865 does not include the cattle of any roving grazier who may choose to graze for a few months on the public ground of a village. That Act does not vest the right of using such a diversion of the village grazing ground in the villagers themselves, but in the Revenue Commissioner, whose consent must be obtained. COLLECTOR OF THANA v BAL PATEL

2. ——— Suit for infringement of patent—Act XV of 1859, s. 25—Substantial difference in machinery—Injunction—Damages and account of profits.—The fact that a machine has been several times improved since the original patent was obtained is no argument against its being a useful invention within s. 25, Act XV of 1859. Cunnington v. Nuttal, L. R., 5 H. L., 205, followed as to the test of "novelty" in an invention. In deciding whether a machine, patented as an entire invention, is an imitation and piracy of another machine previously patented as an entire invention, the question is,—Is the later patented machine substantially the same as the earlier one? The fact of considerable differences existing in the several parts of the two machines will not prevent the latter machine from being, as a whole, a copy of the earlier one; even where an exclusive privilege might have been acquired had the alterations in the later machine been claimed as improvements on the earlier one. Clark v. Adie, 2 App. Cas., 315, followed. Where a patent has been obtained for a machine which the patentee subsequently somewhat improves, a subsequent specification claiming the improved machine as a novel combination is bad, though the improvement might be claimed and protected as such. Where a new arrangement of the parts of a machine is claimed as an improvement, the arrangement must be clearly described in the specification. The mere substitution of one mechanical equivalent for another already in use will not protect it. Where a case of infringement of a patent has been made out, an injunction will follow as a matter of course. A plaintiff cannot pray for an account of profits and for damages. He must elect between the two remedies. If the plaintiff elects to take an account of the profits, such accounts will only be carried back to the period of one year before the filing of the plaint, in accordance with Act IX of 1871, art. 11. KINMOND v. 4. ——— Particulars of infringement, Sufficiency of—Practice—Act XV of 1859, s. 34—Stat. 15 & 16 Vict., c. 95 (Patent Law Amendment Act, 1852), s. 41.—In a suit for the infringement of certain inventions the plaintiff did not, as required by s. 34 of Act XV of 1859, deliver with his plaint particulars of the breaches complained of in the suit. In his plaint, after describing his inventions, he alleged generally that the defendant had made and used them at a certain place without his license. Held that, as required by s. 34 of Act XV of 1859, the plaintiff should have delivered with his plaint particulars of the breaches complained of; that the general allegation as to infringement contained in the plaint did not amount to such particulars; and that under these circumstances the plaintiff came into Court with a case which could not be tried. PETMAN v. BULL . I. L. R., 5 All., 371.

In the same case, on appeal to the Privy Council,—Held the sole object of Act XV of 1859, s. 34, corresponding with s. 41 of the English Patent Law Amendment Act, 1852, is to give the defendant fair notice of the case which he has to meet, and it is quite immaterial whether the requisite information be given in the plaint itself or in a separate paper. Talbot v. La Roche, 15 C. B., 310, and Needham v. Oxley, 1 H. & M., 248, approved. Particulars of breaches must be distinguished from particulars of objections for want of novelty. In the latter case the particular instances may not be within the knowledge of the patentee and must be specified: in the former the defendant must know whether and in what respect he has been guilty of infringement. Where three patents of the plaintiff all related to one article,—a kiln for burning bricks,—and the second and third in date were for improvements upon the invention specified in the first, and the plaintiff alleged a particular kiln constructed and used by the defendant, and in his plaint not only referred to his patents, but indicated in the case of each of them the infringements of which he complained,—Held, reversing the decision of the High Court, that this was a sufficient compliance with the Act. LEDGARD v. 12. ———— Enquiry into pauperism—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 310—Limitation Act, 1859, s. 14—Deduction of time—Presentation of plaint in wrong Court—Institution of suit.—The plaintiff applied by petition, on 20th February 1873, to the Subordinate Judge of Meerut for leave to sue in forma pauperis. The petition contained a statement of the claim and such particulars as are required in a plaint, and a prayer that, as part of the immoveable property claimed was situated in the Punjab, the Subordinate Judge would seek the necessary sanction to give him jurisdiction. The Subordinate Judge, considering that the suit should be instituted in the Delhi district, rejected the application. On 3rd March the plaintiff presented the petition to the Deputy Commissioner of Delhi, and was admitted by that officer to sue as a pauper. The Deputy Commissioner having applied for sanction to try the suit, the High Court, North-Western Provinces, and the Chief Court of the Punjab considered it advisable that the suit should be tried at Meerut; and on 10th June 1873 the Deputy Commissioner returned the petition for presentation in the proper Court in the North-Western Provinces. On 19th July the plaintiff presented it to the Subordinate Judge of Meerut, who received and registered it as a plaint. On 10th November the defendants filed written statements, wherein they urged that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis until he had proved his pauperism in the

17 Civil Procedure
Code, s 401, Explanation and s 407—On an application to sue in forma pauperis the Court is required to deal with the question of the applicant's pauperism with reference to the definition of that word as given in the explanation to s. 401 of the Code of Civil Procedure and in deciding it to ascertain the exact property, its market value, and the title thereto, and then to deal with the case under s. 407 of the Code, irrespective of any surmises as to the reason why the applicant has valued his claim at a high figure. MUHAMMAD HUSAIN v AJUDHIA PRASAD I. L. R., 10 All., 487

the 'subject matter of the suit' although claimed in the petition—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1859), ss 401-403, 409, 410—The petitioners prayed to be allowed as paupers to sue the respondent for certain property specified in the schedule annexed to their petition. At the hearing of the petition under ss 408 and 409 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1859) the respondent appeared and deposited in Court some of the articles claimed by the petitioners to which he admitted they were entitled. The value of the articles deposited was Rs 1100. The petitioners acknowledged that the articles were their property but declined to take possession of them. Held that the petitioners were not paupers as defined by s. 401 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1859), being possessed of property worth Rs 1100 other than the subject matter of the suit, and that they could not therefore be allowed to sue as paupers. The inquiry into pauperism under ss. 403 and 409 takes place before any suit is in existence, for until an application to sue as a pauper is granted, there is no plaint, and consequently no suit (see s. 410). Any property therefore found at such inquiry not to be really in dispute cannot be regarded as part of the "subject matter of the suit," although it may be entered in the particulars of the application for leave to sue as a pauper. The ground for excluding the "subject-matter of the suit" under s. 401 is because such property is presumably out of the petitioner's reach and cannot be made use of by him to carry on his litigation. In the present case the articles deposited in Court were freely at the disposal of the petitioners and could not therefore be excluded from consideration. DWARAKANATH NARAYAN v MADHAYAT VISHVAKATH I. 19. ——— Ground for rejecting petition—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 407—Rejection of application to sue as a pauper.—The terms of s. 407 (e) of the Code must not be read as limiting the Court's discretion to merely ascertaining whether the "right to sue" arose within its jurisdiction, but have a more extended meaning, namely, that an applicant must make out that he has a good subsisting cause of action, capable of enforcement in Court, and calling for an answer, and not barred by the law of limitation or any other law. Also per MAHMOOD, J.—The provisions of s. 407 must be interpreted strictly, inasmuch as they operate in derogation of the right possessed by every litigant to seek the aid of the Courts of Justice; and an exercise of jurisdiction under that section, when such exercise of jurisdiction is open to the objection of illegality or material irregularity, would form a proper subject of revision by the High Court. *Har Prasad v. The Subordinate Judge refused to execute the order, on the ground that the pauper suit was still pending in another Court. His order was affirmed by the District Judge on appeal. On second appeal to the High Court, —Held that, under s. 412 of Act X of 1877, the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order for payment of Court-fees by the plaintiff. decree.—A plaintiff suing in formâ pauperis to recover property valued at Rs. 60,000 obtained a decree for Rs. 1,439. The Court, with reference to the provisions of s. 411 of the Civil Procedure Code, directed that the plaintiff should pay Rs. 1,196 as the amount of Court-fees which would have been paid by him if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper. The Collector having applied under s. 411 to recover this amount (by attachment of the Rs. 1,439 payable to the plaintiff), the defendant objected that (i) certain costs payable to her by the plaintiff under the same decree, and (ii) a sum of money payable to her by the plaintiff under a decree which he had obtained in a cross-suit in the same Court, should be set off against the Rs. 1,439 payable by her to him, with reference to ss. 246 and 247 of the Code, and that thus nothing would remain due by her which the Government could recover. No application for execution was made by the plaintiff for his Rs. 1,439 or by the defendant for her costs. On appeal from an order allowing the Collector's application, it was contended that the 'subject-matter of the suit' in s. 411 of the Code meant the sum which the successful pauper-plaintiff is entitled to get as a result of his success in the suit; but that in the suit and the cross-suit taken together, the plaintiff ultimately stood to lose a small sum, the defendant being the holder of the larger sum awarded altogether. Held that the contention had no force, as execution had not been taken out by the plaintiff or the defendant or both, and it could not be said that the Government had been trying to execute the plaintiff's decree, or was a representative of the plaintiff as holder of the decretal order in his favour for Rs. 1,439, so as to bring into operation the special rules of ss. 246 and 247 of the Code between him and the defendant. Held also that the plaintiff was one who, in the sense of s. 411, had succeeded in respect of part of the "subject-matter" of his suit, and on that part therefore a first charge was by law reserved and secured to the Government, which was justified in recovering it in these proceedings from the defendant, who was ordered, by the decree to pay it in the same way as costs are ordinarily recoverable under the Code. Held that the decrees in the suit and the cross-suit not having reached a stage in which the provisions of ss. 246 and 247 of the Code would come into play, no questions of set-off and consequent reduction or other modification of the "subject-matter" of the suit decreed against the defendant as payable by her to the plaintiff had arisen or could be entertained. *JANKI v. PAYMENT INTO COURT—continued.

6. ———— Payment to stay sale in execution of decree—Suit to recover.—Certain property which had been mortgaged to the plaintiff by a bond executed by J D on 25th February 1867 was sold to him in execution of a decree passed upon that bond on 3rd September 1868. Before such sale, but after the above mortgage, the property was attached by the first defendant, in execution of a decree of 1865 (i.e., J D's equity of redemption was attached), and a part of the property was sold. The sale was set aside for irregularity, but the attachment remaining, the first defendant resumed proceedings in execution and got an order for sale, when the plaintiff released it from liability to such sale by paying into Court the money due, which he now sought to recover. Held that the first defendant had a right to sell the right and interest of J D in the property, and was therefore entitled to keep the money which saved the sale. GOSSAIN MUNRAJ POOREE v. DEEN DYAL LALL . 20 W. R., 20

7. ———— Payment by auction-purchaser of mortgage-decree against his purchase.—Auction-purchasers with notice of a mortgagee's lien are liable to pay off the mortgage, and to satisfy any decree which the mortgagee may obtain in regard to the property in a suit pending at the time of the purchase. Such decree cannot be satisfied by payment into Court, unless the mortgagee has the means of immediately taking the money out of Court, or acquiesces in such payment as payment to himself. LAND MORTGAGE BANK v. RAM RUTTUN NEOGY . 21 W. R., 270

8. ———— Payment to protect property from sale.—P lent money to S upon a specially registered tumsook pledging immoveable property, and afterwards obtained a decree under Act XX of 1866, s. 53, for principal and interest. More than four years later, he brought a further suit against S to recover the interest due under the same bond. Meanwhile plaintiffs also lent money to S under a bond by which the same property was pledged, and also recovered a decree in execution of which the property was sold. P then proceeded to attach the same property in execution of his second decree, when plaintiffs objected under Act VIII of 1859, s. 246, but ineffectually; and after that, to protect the property which they had purchased, they paid a sum of money into Court which was subsequently taken out by P. They now sued to recover that money. Held that, under the circumstances, the payment of the money into Court was not a voluntary payment, and the plaintiffs were entitled to recover it. MUTHORA MOHUN ROY CHOWDHRY v. PEAREE MOHUN SHAHA . 23 W. R., 344

9. ———— Payment into Government treasury—Purchase-money—Civil Procedure Code, s. 308—Purchase in execution of decree—Rules of High Court of 1st June 1882.—Under the Rules of the High Court, dated 21st June 1882, a payment into the Government treasury is equivalent to a payment into Court for the purposes of s. 308 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. *SRINIVASA BHATTA v. PAYMENT INTO COURT—concluded.

10. ———— Payment by purchaser into the Post Office within time—Money not received by the Court until after expiration of time allowed by section—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 307.—A purchaser at an execution sale was bound under s. 307 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to pay the balance of the purchase-money into Court on the 19th June 1896. On the 17th June he paid in the amount to the Post Office at Yellapur, and obtained a money order which he sent to the Nazir of the Court. The Nazir did not receive the money until the 22nd June. Held that the payment was not in time. The Post Office is not the agent of the Court, and the purchaser was bound to see that the money reached the Court in time to satisfy the requirements of s. 307. RAMCHANDRA KRISHNAPA v. BELYA . I. L. R., 22 Bom., 415

11. ———— Order in execution that defendant pay money into Court—Appeal by plaintiff against order—Payment into Court by defendant—Refusal of plaintiff pending appeal to take money out of Court—Attachment of the money so paid in by another creditor of defendant and payment to him—Subsequent application by plaintiff in execution for payment—Effect of his previous refusal.—In execution of a decree against the defendant obtained by the plaintiff, an order was made, directing the defendant (inter alia) to pay into Court the sum of Rs. 140-8-0. Both parties appealed against this order, but pending the appeals the defendant paid the amount into Court. The plaintiff, however, refused to take it, on the ground that he had appealed against the order under which it was paid in, and the Court subsequently passed an order that the money should be returned to the defendant. But before this could be done, the money was attached by a third person, in execution of his decree against the defendant, and a few days afterwards the money was paid over to him. Shortly afterwards the appeal against the order directing the defendant to pay Rs. 140-8-0 to the plaintiff was heard and the order was confirmed. Thereupon the plaintiffs applied in execution (inter alia) for payment of the sum of Rs. 140-8-0. The defendant contended that he had already paid it. The Subordinate Judge directed the defendant to pay this sum into Court within one month. The defendant appealed to the District Court, who confirmed the order of the Subordinate Judge. The defendant then appealed to the High Court. Held that the orders of the lower Courts should be reversed. When the defendant paid the Rs. 140-8-0 into Court in execution of the decree, the Court held the money on account of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff, who had not obtained a stay of execution, could not refuse to take it, because an appeal was pending. The plaintiff's refusal, therefore, to take the money out of Court did not justify the Subordinate Judge in treating the money as the defendant's and in ordering it to be paid to another judgment-creditor of the defendant without his having in any way expressed his assent to the money being so treated. *LAKSHMAN DADAJI v. s. 81 and s. 323—Act likely to cause harm, done without a criminal intent and to prevent other harm—Causing hurt.—The accused was a sepoy in a native infantry regiment. On the occasion of a fire in the city of Ahmednagar, he and the rest of his company turned out to assist in extinguishing it. He with other sepoys was stationed by their officer with orders to keep clear a space in front of the burning house, and not to allow any one not in uniform to intrude on that space. The police under the city chief constable were also engaged at the fire, and on some one of them coming round from the rear, they were warned off by the sentries. A fracas between the soldiers and the police took place, and the chief constable was kicked by the accused. For this he was charged before the Magistrate, and fined for voluntarily causing hurt under s. 323 of the Penal Code. In evidence it appeared that the police attempted to force the military guard, which had been posted as above stated, and it was further proved that the chief constable was not in uniform, and that the accused did not know who he was. It was not alleged that the kick was unnecessarily violent. Held that the conviction was bad. The Magistrate having found that the chief constable was not in uniform, and that the accused did not know who he was, the kick was justifiable as given in good faith for the purpose of preventing much greater harm under s. 81 of the Indian Penal Code, and as a means of acting up to the military order. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 1. ——— Capacity for doing wrong—Malice.—In construing s. 83 of the Penal Code, the capacity of doing that which is wrong is not so much to be measured by years as by the strength of the offender's understanding and judgment. The circumstances of a case may disclose such a degree of malice as to justify the application of the maxim malitia supplet aetatem. QUEEN v. AIMONA

[1 W. R., Cr., 43]

2. ——— Capacity of understanding to commit offence.—An objection that the accused is of such an age as not to have attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of his conduct is not one of a preliminary character, but rather a matter of defence to be considered with the other issues arising in the case. Where the accused is over seven years of age and under twelve, the incapacity to commit an offence only arises where the child has not attained sufficient maturity, etc.: such non-attainment would have apparently to be specially pleaded and proved. The "consequences of his conduct" mentioned in s. 83, Penal Code, are not the penal consequences to the offender, but the natural consequences which flow from a voluntary act. *QUEEN v. sense as signifying political alienation or discontent, that is to say, a feeling of disloyalty to the existing Government which tends to a disposition not to obey, but to resist and subvert the Government. PER RANADE, J.—"Disaffection" is not a mere absence or negation of love or good-will, but a positive feeling of aversion which is akin to disloyalty, a defiant insubordination of authority, or when it is not defiant, it secretly seeks to alienate the people and weaken the bond of allegiance and prepossesses the minds of the people with avowed or secret animosity to Government,—a feeling which tends to bring the Government into hatred or contempt by imputing base and corrupt motives to it, and makes them indisposed to obey or support the laws of the realm, and which promotes discontent and public disorder. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMOHANDEA NARAYAN

4. ————— Exciting disaffection—Meaning of the term "disaffection" explained.—Any one who, by any of the means referred to in s. 124A of the Penal Code, excites, or attempts to excite, feelings of hatred, dislike, ill-will, enmity, or hostility towards the Government established by law in British India, excites or attempts to excite, as the case may be, feelings of "disaffection" as that term is used in s. 124A. Such feelings are necessarily inconsistent with and incompatible with a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of Government and to support that Government against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist it. The term "disaffection" may be taken as synonymous with "disloyalty." The ordinary meaning of the term "disaffection" as used in s. 124A is not varied by the explanation appended to that section. When a person is charged with having committed the offence punishable under s. 124A of the Penal Code, his intention may be inferred from one particular speech, article, or letter, or from that speech, article, or letter considered in conjunction with what such person has said, written, or published on another or other occasions. Where it is ascertained that the intention of such person was to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India, it is immaterial whether or not the words spoken, written, or published could have the effect of exciting such feelings of disaffection, and it is immaterial whether the words were true or were false, and, except on the question of punishment, or in a case in which the speaker, writer, or publisher is charged with having excited such feelings of disaffection, it is immaterial whether or not the words did in fact excite such feelings of disaffection. *Queen-Empress v. s. 153—Wantonly giving provocation with intent to cause riot—Abetment of riot by the public—Penal Code, s. 117.—In August 1893 a riot took place in Bombay between Hindus and Musalmans. The excitement caused by the riot had not entirely subsided, when the accused composed and published a poem, giving an account of the outbreak, and incidentally, extolling certain classes of the Hindu community, namely, the Ghatias and Kamatis, for the brave resistance which they had offered to the Mahomedan rioters. The poem extolled the Ghatias and Kamatis, and then followed these lines: "May God give glory to you, confer joy on you, night and day! Fight again for your country's good! Brave, brave are the Kamatis! Why fear for dying, brother, why fear for dying? Sooner or later, but only once, a man has to die." The poem was written in Gujarati, a language not ordinarily spoken by the Ghatias and Kamatis, or even by the Mahomedans. It did not appear that any copies of the work were distributed among the people who had taken part in the riot, nor did any fresh riot take place subsequently to the publication of the work. The accused were prosecuted and convicted under ss 117 and 153 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860) on the ground that the lines quoted above, specially the words "Fight again," were a direct instigation to the Ghatias and Kamatis to renew the disturbances. Held that the meaning of the passages complained of was to be gathered from the whole poem. The general spirit of the poem was clearly in favour of peace and reconciliation. It consisted from beginning to end of a lamentation over the riots, and the destruction and death they had caused, and of repeated counsel to peace and harmony between Hindus and Mahomedans. And there was nothing to indicate that the author's intention was to instigate the Hindus or provoke the Mahomedans to renew the disturbances. The words "Fight again" were no doubt objectionable, but it would not be a proper construction of the words to allow them to override the whole context of the work. The composition could not be regarded as an "illegal act," and its publication was not "malicious" or "wantonly" within the meaning of s 153 of the Penal Code. QUEEN EMPRESS v. KAMAT.

officer at a police station, who, being as such officer
bound to enter all reports brought to him of cognizable or non-cognizable offences in the station diary, refused to enter a report made to him concerning the commission of an offence, and entered instead in the diary a totally different and false report as that which was made to him, had thereby committed the offence punishable under s. 177 of the Penal Code.

7. ——— False returns furnished by vaccinators.—Certain vaccinators were charged with furnishing false returns to their official superior. The Magistrate found as a fact that the returns furnished were false, but acquitted the defendants on the ground that they were not "legally bound" to furnish information within the meaning of s. 177 of the Penal Code. Held that s. 177 embraces every case in which a subordinate may seek to impose false information upon his superior. The defendants in the present case were public servants, and part of the duties which they undertook was to make true returns to their official superior. To make false returns was therefore an offence. ANONYMOUS

7. ———— Voluntarily obstructing a public servant in discharge of his duties—Mamlatdar's decree—Execution by a surveyor under Collector's orders—Public function—Right of private defence.—In a suit filed in a Mamlatdar's Court under Bombay Act III of 1876, the plaintiff obtained a decree against the accused for possession of a certain piece of land. When the Mamlatdar proceeded to execute the decree, he found that there was no land corresponding to the boundaries set forth in the plaint, and that the parties were joint owners and in joint occupation of the land in dispute. Finding himself unable to execute the decree, the Mamlatdar referred the matter to the Collector for advice. The Collector, on looking into the papers of the case, ordered a surveyor to execute the decree by dividing the land in dispute and putting the decree-holder in possession of his share. The surveyor, in attempting to execute the decree, was obstructed by the accused, who was thereupon tried and convicted of the offence of voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions, under s. 186 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). Held, reversing the conviction, that, as the Collector had no legal

A crowd collected, and the commissioner felt it would be unsafe to proceed to carry out the order by force, and was unable to do so otherwise. The defendant was prosecuted and sentenced under Penal Code, s. 186. Held that the facts disclosed no offence under that section. The use of the word "voluntarily" in that section is to contemplate some overt act of obstruction, and that mere passive conduct should be penal. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SOMMANNA

The mere fact of a public servant or railway servant believing he was acting in the discharge of his duties or public functions is sufficient to make resistance or obstruction to amount to an offence. IN THE MATTER OF PETITION OF BARODA KANTO PRAMANICK

—A person cannot be convicted, under s. 201 of the Penal Code, of causing evidence of the commission of an offence by himself to disappear, nor can he be convicted of the abetment of such an act (per LLOYD and KEMBALL, JJ.). REG. v. KASHINATH DINKAR . . . 8 Bom., Cr., 126

5. ————— Causing disappearance of evidence of offence.—K and B, having caused the death of J in a field belonging to B, removed J's dead body from that field to his own field with the intention of screening themselves from punishment. K was convicted on these facts of an offence under s. 201 of the Penal Code. Held that that section referred to persons other than the actual offenders, and K could not therefore properly be punished under that section for what he had done to screen himself from punishment. Also that, as a matter of fact, he did not, by removing J's corpse from one field to another, cause any evidence of J's murder, which that corpse afforded, to disappear, and his act, although his object may have been to divert suspicion from himself and B, did not constitute the offence defined in that section. *EMPRESS OF INDIA v. 6. ————— False information—Exculpatory statements inculcating another.—A woman who, with her infant child, eloped from her husband's house, was afterwards arrested on a charge of murdering the child which was missing. She made three different statements: (1) that she had left it with her husband; (2) that she had been enticed away by one R, who had taken the child from her; (3) that one H had drowned the child. The Sessions Judge believed the last statement, and convicted her under s. 201 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction was wrong, and must be set aside. S. 201 of the Penal Code does not apply to a case where the person, who is the probable or possible offender, makes statements exculpating himself by inculcating another. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BEHALA BIBI. *EMPRESS v. 7. ————— Concealing evidence of crime—Secondary offence, Conviction of.—In a trial upon a charge under s. 201 of the Penal Code, the accused made a statement to the effect that he was present at the commission of a murder by two other persons; that he himself took no part in the act; that before the murder was committed, one of the persons named pulled off a razai from the bed on which the deceased was sleeping; and that, in his presence, the razai was subsequently concealed in a stack. It was proved that the razai belonged to the deceased, that it was found concealed in a stack, and that it was pointed out by the accused to the police. The accused was convicted of concealing evidence of the murder, with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment, under s. 201 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction must be quashed, inasmuch as, if the razai had not been concealed or destroyed, its presence or existence would have been no evidence of

8. ————— Disappearance of evidence—Intention to screen offender.—A person cannot be punished under s. 201 of the Penal Code, where the act which caused the disappearance of the evidence of the commission of an offence was not done with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment. It is not sufficient that the disappearance of evidence was likely to have the effect of screening the offender. QUEEN v. TOOLSHEE RAI [5 N. W., 186]

9. ————— Giving false information of offence.—Prisoner was charged, under s. 201 of the Penal Code, "for that he, knowing or having reason to believe that an offence punishable with death had been committed, with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment, gave information respecting the offence which he knew or believed to be false." Held that the proper order of proof on the part of the prosecution in the case was to prove (1) that A N was murdered; (2) that the prisoner gave information respecting the offence; (3) that such information was false and known by him to be so; (4) that he then knew of the commission of the murder; and (5) that his intention was to screen the murderer. Held also that it was essential to the completeness of the case for the prosecution to show, not only that the information was given, but also that it was false, and known to be so by the prisoner. Further enquiry directed under s. 422, Criminal Procedure Code, 1861. QUEEN v. SUBBAMANYA PILLAI . . . 3 Mad., 251

10. ————— Causing disappearance of evidence of crime—Proof of commission of crime.—A conviction on a charge of causing the disappearance of evidence of an offence which amounted to culpable homicide not amounting to murder may be good, though there be no proof of who committed the culpable homicide. QUEEN v. MUDDUN MOHUN BOSE [7 W. R., Cr., 22]

11. ————— Causing disappearance of evidence of an offence.—Held that it is necessary, in order to justify a conviction under s. 201 of the Penal Code, that an offence for which some person has been convicted, or is criminally responsible, should have been committed. EMPRESS OF INDIA v. ABDUL KADIE . . . I. L. R., 3 All., 279

12. ————— Causing disappearance of evidence of an offence—Omitting to report a sudden, unnatural, or suspicious death.—Before an accused can be convicted of an offence under s. 201 of the Penal Code, it must be proved that an offence, the evidence of which he is charged with causing to disappear, has actually been committed, and also that the accused knew or had information sufficient to lead him to believe that the offence had been committed.

It was contended that the enso did not fall within that section, as the satisfaction, not having been certified to the Court, could not be recognized by the Court executing the decree, and that consequently no offence had been committed. Held that the words "after it has been satisfied," used in s. 210 of the Penal Code, indicate only the fact of the satisfaction of the decree. The fact that the satisfaction is of such a nature that the Court executing the decree could not recognize it, does not prevent the decree-holder from being properly convicted of an offence under that section. *MADHUR CHUNDER MOZUMDAR v. 2. ————— Public servant disobeying direction of law with intent to save person from punishment—Evidence of such person's offence.—It is sufficient for the purpose of a conviction under s. 217 of the Penal Code that the accused has knowingly disobeyed any direction of the law as to the way in which he is to conduct himself as a public servant, and that he has done this with the intention of saving a person from legal punishment; it is not necessary to show that in point of fact the person so intended to be saved had committed an offence or was justly liable to legal punishment. *EMPRESS v. The warrant was sent to a certain thana to be executed. It was there, after being copied into a book kept for that purpose at the thana made over to a particular constable for execution. When the constable to whom the warrant had been made over had left the thana it was discovered that D was in a village other than that in which he had been supposed to be. Thereupon the officer temporarily in charge of the thana made a copy from the book at the thana, endorsed on the back the names of one N and some other constables, and having signed the endorsement, sent N and the others out with this paper to arrest D. N and his companions arrested D, but as they were returning with him in custody, some of D's friends, aided by D himself, attacked them, rescued D, and caused hurt to the police. Held that the police officers concerned in arresting D under the circumstances above described were not acting in the lawful discharge of their duty within the meaning of s 332 of the Penal Code, so as to render the accused liable to conviction

She and the parents of the second girl were charged together under ss. 372, 373 of the Penal Code. The charges related to both girls. Held that ss. 372, 373 of the Penal Code may be applicable in a case where the minor concerned is a member of the dancing-girl caste. Per MUTHUSAMI AYYAR, J.—It would be no offence if the intention was that the girl should be brought up as a daughter, and that, when she attains her age, she should be allowed to select either to marry or follow the profession of her prostitute mother. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. The District Magistrate of Sholapur convicted accused No. 1 of an offence under s. 372 and accused No. 2 of abetment of the offence under ss. 372 and 108A of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced them each to six months' rigorous imprisonment. Held that there was no offence committed in British India, and therefore the accused No. 2 was not guilty of abetment, and s. 108A of the Penal Code had no application to the present case. Mere intention not followed by any act cannot constitute any offence, and an indirect preparation which does not amount to an act which amounts to a commencement of the offence does not constitute either a principal offence or an attempt or abetment of the same. The intention of either of the accused while they were staying at Sholapur did not constitute any offence, and their removal with the girl to Tuljapur did not by itself constitute an abetment. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 2. ———— Obtaining possession of minor for purposes of prostitution—Offence defined by above section explained.—To constitute the offence provided for by s. 373 of the Penal Code, it is necessary, first, that a minor under sixteen years of age shall be bought, hired, or otherwise obtained possession of, and, secondly, that the minor shall be bought, hired, or otherwise obtained possession of, with the intent that the same minor, while still under the age of sixteen years, will be employed for the purposes of prostitution, or with the knowledge that it is likely that the said minor, while still under the age of sixteen years, will be employed or used for an unlawful and immoral purpose. The offence is complete so soon as the obtaining possession, with the requisite intention or knowledge, of the minor is accomplished, though the minor may not enter upon prostitution until years after she has attained maturity, or may never enter upon such a profession at all. *Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. PENAL CODE (ACT XLV OF 1860) —continued.

Onus of proving guilty intention in case of sale of minor for purpose of prostitution—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s 106—In order to constitute an offence under s 373 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that the intention or knowledge of likelihood as to the employment of the minor for purposes of prostitution should be with reference to employment either immediate or at some definite and not very remote future period, but an suffice under the section is complete as soon as a girl is purchased with the guilty intention or knowledge of likelihood that she will, while still a minor under the age of sixteen years, be employed for that purpose, although the point of time for such employment may be remote by reason of her physical incapacity for the purpose. H, the father of two girls, twins about a year old, sold one of them to A, a prostitute, for Rs, and within ten days of such sale also sold her the other for Rs. A was shown to have previously purchased another child whom she had brought up from her infancy, and who was then living with her and leading the life of a prostitute. Both H and K an innocent reason for her purchase of the girl. H and K were tried jointly, H being charged with an offence under s 372, viz, selling the girls for the purpose of prostitution, and K with an offence under s 373, viz, buying for the same purpose. Neither was charged with abetting the other. The two confessions were used as evidence, and there was other evidence tending to prove the intention and guilty knowledge. The Deputy Magistrate convicted each of the offence with which they were charged. On appeal the Sessions Judge acquitted K on the ground that the offence under s. 373 could not be committed unless the intention was that the minor

ance to a period some twelve or fourteen years after the purchase when the minor became capable of being used for that purpose. Held for the reasons above stated, that the acquittal on that ground was erroneous. Held, further, that having regard to the circumstances under which the confession of K was given and retracted, it was open to suspicion, and could not safely be acted upon, and that the confession made by H was not legally admissible against her, as they were not being tried jointly for the same offence. Held also that having regard to the provisions of s 106-111 (a) of the Evidence Act, and to the fact that there was evidence apart from the confessions, which tended to show the knowledge and intention which the character and circumstances of the act suggested, the onus lay on K to show that the intention was other than that which the act suggested, or that the employment of the girls as prostitutes was not intended till after they had attained the age of dancing-girls ever having been married. On its being contended that there was no evidence of intent to support a conviction under s. 373 of the Indian Penal Code, — Held that there was evidence before the Court to support the conviction. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PAPA SANTI. I. L. R., 23 Mad., 159

The accused was thereupon committed to the Court of Session on a charge under s. 475 of the Penal Code. A few days before the trial of the accused, the police searched the house of one S, who was a witness for the defence, and there discovered a batch of suspicious papers which were produced at the trial, and put in as evidence against the accused. The accused was convicted of the offence under s. 475 of the Penal Code and sentenced to transportation for life. Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that the suspicious papers found in S's house were not admissible in evidence against the accused. Held, further, that the Judge's direction to the jury regarding those papers, that they established a connection between the accused and many of the witnesses belonging to the same faction, and that they showed the extent to which the practice of forgery had gone in the village, and that in this way they were relevant to the question of guilty knowledge and intention, was a misdirection which prejudiced the accused. of the public does not constitute an offence under s. 505, but it is necessary that the fear or alarm should be caused in such circumstances as to render it likely that a person may be induced to commit an offence against the State or against the public tranquillity. Account cannot be taken in a case of this kind of a vague possibility that the state of mind which is caused by alarm may easily induce a person to commit an offence against the public tranquillity. This would depend on the circumstances of a particular case. The accused, a daffadar of a tea estate in Darjeeling, who had recently returned from Nepal, circulated a report among the garden coolies that a war was impending between the British Government and Nepal, that Nepalese soldiers were stationed on the frontier, and that the coolies would be killed by the British. The effect of the report was that about 150 coolies immediately ran away. Held that the accused could not be taken to have intended more than the probable result of the report he circulated, the result which, in fact, did take place. PENSIONS ACT (VI OF 1849).

1. ——— Arrears of pension, Succession to—Heirs—Succeeding grantee.—Arrears of pension due to the deceased at the time of her death form part of her estate, and the person who is legal heir to the deceased is entitled to recover them. The grantee of the pension formerly enjoyed by the deceased has no right to such arrears which formed part of the deceased's estate. NOUSHABAH SOOLTAN BEGUM v. NUBEERAH SOOLTAN BEGUM

2. ——— Agreement to pay portion of pension.—A pension having been granted by Government to B P in lieu of a saranjam held by his grandfather, a claim to share the same by M P and his brothers was compromised by B P, agreeing to pay them a certain proportion thereof yearly. The Agent for Sardars, affirming the decree of the Assistant Agent, found the agreement to be null and void as an assignment of a future interest in a pension. Held that, as the pension was not granted "in consideration of past service and present infirmities or old age," the case did not come within the terms of Act VI of 1849, and that the agreement was a valid one. option of resuming the collection of the toda garas hak formerly levied, resorting only to legal proceedings to enforce their claims, or of receiving from the Government allowances of an equivalent amount, the collections in the latter case being discontinued on all hands. The ancestors of the adoptive father of the plaintiff formerly levied toda garas hak; and after 1862 the Government in respect thereof made payments, under the resolution, to three brothers, of whom one was the plaintiff's father; the latter receiving a one-third share, which on his death in 1865 was no longer paid. Held that a suit against the Government for payment of this third share with arrears fell under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4, which prohibits cognizance, save as in the Act provided, "of any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government, whatever may have been the consideration for such pension or grant, or whatever may have been the nature of the payment, claim, or right for which such pension or grant may have been substituted." Held that there was no reason, either in the language of the Act itself or in any antecedent legislation, for construing these words as applicable only to rights in the nature of pensions. MAHARAJA MOHANSINGHIJI JESINGHIJI v. the Revenue officer to refer the parties to the Civil Court for the determination of their respective interests in the income or other benefits, which the executive will, however, still, as against either or both of the litigants, be at liberty to allow or withhold. Lands held free of assessment under a grant from Government which bestows on the grantee the lands themselves, and not merely the Government revenue arising from them, do not fall within the provision of the Pensions Act. KABAJI HARI v. 6. ———— Grant of land revenue—Former suit for money.—The plaintiffs formerly sued for a sum of money, and, obtaining a decree, attached in 1861 two villages the land revenue of which had been granted in inam. The attachment continued down to 1875, when the last holder of the villages died, and the Government having resumed the villages, the attachment was raised. The plaintiffs now sued to have their right declared to satisfy their decree from the revenues of the villages. Held that the former suit was not a suit in respect of a pension or grant of money of land revenue, and that an attachment placed in pursuance of an ordinary money-decree before the date of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) could not be treated as a suit in respect of a pension, grant of money, or land revenue instituted before such date, so as to exclude the operation of the Act under s. 1. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. 8. ———— Gratuitous pension—Suit for share of annual grant made by Government.—One S, a servant of the Delhi Emperor, having been killed in Burdwan while fighting for his master, the Emperor built a tomb over his remains, and made a grant of land (five mouzahs) to his family for the purpose of maintaining it in the manner usual amongst Mahomedans. This grant was subsequently confirmed to a descendant of S and his heirs. Some years later the land came into the possession of the Raja of Burdwan, who paid to the grantees a certain sum of money annually. When the perpetual settlement was made, the British Government continued the payment on account of the Raja, in whose zamindari four of the five mouzahs were incorporated. Owing to disputes in the family, a reference was made to Government, who reduced the money payment and appointed a mutwalli for the tomb. One of the descendants of S then sued the Government and the mutwalli for a share of this annual payment. Held that the grant to S's family was not a gratuitous pension or allowance, and that the money payment by the zamindar of Burdwan was rent justly due to them for the use and occupation of their land, and that the fact of the payment being continued by Government did not alter its nature.

paid from the Government treasury called mokasa amals. A and his successors continued in possession down to 1852, when the inam was attached on behalf of Government pending an inquiry, under Bombay Act XI of 1852 into the title of the holder of the inam. The attachment remained in force till 1865, when Government finally decided that the inam property, with the exception of a certain portion should be restored to those from whose possession it had been taken in 182. Thereupon D the successor in interest of A, applied to the Collector to be restored to possession. The Collector refused. D therefore sued him for arrears of the mokasa amals, and obtained a decree in 1868. Thereafter D did not

Held that the suit against Government was not cognizable by the Civil Court's both under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) s 4 and under the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876), s 4. Both these Acts, though not retrospective in their operation, still do not create rights to relief against the Government where none subsisted before. 15. Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Abkari revenue—Inamdar, Right of, to abkari revenue under grant from Peshwa—The Peshwa's Government granted in inam to the plaintiff's ancestor, by sanad, the villages of Golap and Randpar. The sanad granted "water trees grass wood, quarries, mines, buried treasure, present and future cesses and taxes and assessments." The plaintiff brought the present suit to recover from the defendant a part of the abkari revenue for 1884-85 and 1885-86. He contended that the revenue derived by the Government for tapping trees in the villages aforesaid was a tax within the contemplation of the grant. Held that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871). The tax in question was a money tax and as soon as it was imposed, the grant, if it entitled the inamdar to the tax, operated as a grant of the money to be derived from the tax, and was therefore within the spirit if not the letter, of the Pensions Act the object of which was to reserve to the Government the determination

He sued the defendants for an account and for the recovery of his share. Held that the suit, so far as it related to the cash allowance from Government, required a certificate under s. 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871). A cash allowance attached to the worship of an idol is a grant of money within the meaning of s. 4 of the Pensions Act, 1871. 24. ————— Suit relating to in a m land granted before the time of the British Government—Confirmation of inam.—Early in the eighteenth century two villages were granted by the zamindars of Sivaganga and Guntamanaikanur to the last of the Naik rulers of Madura for the maintenance of the rank and dignity of his family which was now represented by the plaintiffs and defendants. Nos. 1 to 23. The property was long managed by the representative, for the time being, of the senior line. In 1844 one of the junior members instituted a suit for partition, which terminated in a decree declaring the corpus of the property to be indivisible and the annual produce to be divisible in certain shares. Subsequently in 1857 a compromise was entered into, by which the parties agreed to vary the distribution of the sharers, but they agreed that the management of the estate, indivisible and inalienable, should continue to be vested in the eldest line subject to certain supervision on the part of the other members. The compromise was long acted upon by the family; but in 1892 the representative of the senior line died, leaving only his widow and infant sons. The widow, as guardian of the elder son, then entered on the management, and, being gosha, delegated it to a stranger. The plaintiffs, representing a junior line, now sued for the removal of these persons from management and the appointment of another manager, alleging both that they had no right to the management and that they had been guilty of mismanagement.

secondary relief—Z and his three minor sons were joint owners of a village which Z hypothecated by deed of simple mortgage to J. Subsequently Z executed another deed of mortgage to J, part of the consideration whereof was the cancellation of the former bond, which was paid off and extinguished accordingly. J, however, fraudulently caused it to appear from the novating document that the former mortgage was still alive, and, after the death of Z, put the bond in suit against Z's widow, who, being ignorant of the fraud, confessed judgment as guardian of her minor sons, and the entire right and interest of Z's heirs were sold in execution of the decree obtained by J. Subsequently the fraud was discovered and Z's sons brought a suit to set aside the execution sale and to recover possession of the share by amendment of the revenue papers "In regard to the remaining one fourth they prayed for possession 'by right of inheritance to Z' by cancellation of the execution sale and of the fraudulent lien Courts strictness in informal initially set the entire resulting

3 FORM AND CONTENTS OF PLAINT(a) DATE OF CAUSE OF ACTION

4 — Limitation — Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s 26 — In a suit to recover possession plaintiff is bound, under s 26 Act VIII of 1859 to give the date on which he was dispossessed as accurately as possible especially where one of the issues is whether he has been in occupation of the land within twelve years of suit BOYDONATH SUMBA v OJAN BIBE 11 W. R, 238

5 — Plaintiff not showing when cause of action arose — A plaintiff is bound by the Civil Procedure Code to show on the face of the plaint that his cause of action accrued within the period of limitation. Where an assignment to himself is a material part of a plaintiff's cause of action, he ought to allege the fact in his plaint BROOKS v GIBSON 21 W. R, 47

6 — Objection to cause of action being barred — S 32 of Act VIII of 1859 imposes upon the Court of first instance the duty of taking any legal objection apparent on the face of the plaint, see Balarao kom Basangonda v. Shigonda valad Kadapa, 7 Bom. A C, 99, and

114. ——— Ground for amendment—Insufficient disclosure of cause of action.—Where the plaint does not sufficiently disclose the cause of action, and a cause of action exists, the plaintiff should have been allowed to amend it under s. 32, Code of Civil Procedure, 1859; not being so allowed, he is at liberty to prove any cause of action which is not inconsistent with the plaint. LUCKHEE PREA DEBIA v. 115. ——— Misstatement of cause of action.—The plaintiff, having failed in an application under s. 441 of the Penal Code, brought a suit in a Civil Court for possession and for the demolition of a wall or fence put up by the defendant, dating his cause of action from his failure in the Criminal Court. In the Court of first instance, he obtained a decree for possession. The Judge on appeal dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that he had no power to set aside a Magistrate's order under the law cited. Held that, if the Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff had misstated his cause

117. ——— Civil Procedure Code, s. 53—Alteration of the relief prayed for.—The restriction as to amendment of a plaint is only as to the nature of the suit; the law prohibits any such amendment as would change the fundamental character of a suit, but an alteration in the relief does not change the character of a suit. Where a purchaser of a mortgage-bond at a sale in execution of decree sued to enforce the bond, but did not pray for sale of the mortgaged property, Held that he might properly have been allowed to amend his plaint and add a prayer for that relief. KASI-NATH DAS v. 118. ——— Amendment transforming claim—Suit for rent converted into suit for ejectment—Variance between pleading and proof—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 53 and 562.—An amendment of a plaint which materially transforms the nature of the claim cannot be made under s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, and certainly not in appeal. S. 53 permits amendment of the plaint before judgment, and not after. The larger powers conferred on Appellate Courts by s. 562 do not authorize such a material transformation of a suit in appeal. BAI SHRI MAJRAJBA v. MAGANJAL BHAISHANKAR I. L. execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 50 and 373.—In a suit brought in a District Munsif's Court to declare certain land liable to be sold in execution of a decree for more than Rs. 2,500, the defendants pleaded that the Court had no jurisdiction. The Munsif allowed the plaintiff to amend the plaint by stating that he abandoned his claim to execute the decree against the land for more than Rs. 2,500. 146. ——— Charges of fraud—General allegations of fraud—Amendment of plaint on appeal—Objection taken for first time on appeal.—Where a plaintiff seeks relief on the ground of fraud, and the plaint contains general allegations, but no specific instances of the alleged fraud, it ought to be immediately, on presentation, rejected or returned for amendment, as it does not disclose a cause of action. The plaintiff sued to recover damages caused by the defendant's fraud during his management of the plaintiff's estate from 1870 to 1884. The plaint disclosed no specific instances of the fraud imputed to the defendant. The Court of first instance, without going into evidence, rejected the plaintiff's claim on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff had no right to sue during the lifetime of his adoptive mother. In second appeal, the respondent objected that the plaint was defective. The plaintiff's pleader asked for leave to amend it by specifying certain instances of the alleged fraud. Held that the amendment could not then be allowed, and the suit must fail. KRISHNAJI v. of the Bank. The plaint described the defendant as "Mrs. Sarah G. Barlow, of Mussoorie," and stated that she was executrix of the deceased B. It began thus: "George Henry Webb, Manager of the above-named plaintiff's business, states as follows," and proceeded to state that the deceased was, at the time of his death, "indebted to the plaintiff," and to set forth the cause of action in detail. It was signed and verified thus: "For the B Bank, Limited, G. H. Webb, Manager." The Court of first instance returned the plaint for amendment under s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, because the suit should not have been brought in the form in which it was brought, but in the form referred to in s. 213 and No. 105 of Sch. IV of the Code. Held, with reference to this ground, that the plaintiff was at liberty to bring a suit for money against any person administering to or representing the estate; and if such suit should be found with reference to the facts in evidence not maintainable, it should be dismissed; but there was no authority for returning a plaint for amendment, when it was found that the suit was not maintainable in the form in which it was brought, in order to amend it so as to convert the suit into one of a different character. MUSSOORIE BANK v. The other raiyats of the village in whom the same right vested were originally joined as plaintiffs, but the plaint was amended under s. 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and their names were struck off the record. A proved no special damage. Held (1) that the fact that the other raiyats of the village had similar rights did not make A's right a public right in the sense that no action could be brought upon it unless special damage was proved; (2) that the right claimed vested in A severally as well as jointly with the other raiyats, and the amendment of the plaint was not contrary to the provisions of s. 31 or 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure. VENKATACHALA v. —Joinder of plaintiffs one of whom has no right to sue for pre-emption.—The plaintiffs in a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption based on the wajib-ul-urz of a village, which gave the right to “co-sharers,” alleged themselves to be jointly interested in the village, and in their plaint claimed relief jointly. One of the two plaintiffs was the widow of a co-sharer in the village, who, at the time of his death, was a member of a joint Hindu family, and it was held she could not claim pre-emption. Held, with reference to the manner in which the plaint was framed, that the other plaintiff could not claim pre-emption entirely on his own account without amending the plaint, but that it was too late for him to take such a course. Damodar Das v. causes of action—Same parties suing in different capacities—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 26 and 31.—By the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the New Dhurumsey Poonjabhoy Spinning and Weaving Company, the plaintiffs’ firm of M F & Co. were appointed agents of the company for twenty-five years, and it was provided that they should have the general control and management of the company. Cl. 98 of the articles provided that the said firm, as such agents, should have full power and authority (inter alia) to appoint and employ, in or for the purposes of the transaction and management of the affairs and business of the company, such solicitors as they should think proper. An agreement, dated 26th August 1874, was also entered into between the company and the partners in the firm of M F & Co., their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the time being constituting the partnership firm of M F & Co., whereby it was agreed that the said firm should be agents to the company for twenty-five years to buy and sell, etc., and particularly to exercise all the powers contained in cl. 18 of the Articles of Association. Messrs. C & B were duly appointed solicitors to the company, and acted as such for a considerable time. M, one of the members of the said firm of M F & Co., died in the middle of March 1876. The plaintiffs complained that G, one of the shareholders in the company, became desirous of ousting the plaintiffs from the position of agents of the company, and of becoming the managing director of the company; that in July 1881 he procured his own election and that of certain nominees of his as directors of the company; and on the 8th August 1881 procured the passing of a resolution at a Board meeting to the effect that, as Messrs. C & B, the company’s solicitors, were also the solicitors of the agents, it was desirable, for the interests of the company, that a change should be made, and that Messrs. H C &

L be appointed solicitors of the company. The plaintiffs alleged that the only object of passing the said resolution was to facilitate the design of G, of ousting the plaintiffs from their agency, and getting the management of the company for himself; that Messrs. H C & L had been for a long time the solicitors of G, and had been advising him in his designs upon the company and upon the plaintiffs, and they contended that the resolution was a breach of the contract between the company and the plaintiffs and a violation of the Articles of Association of the company. The plaintiffs sued G and two other directors of the company and the company itself, and prayed for an injunction against the defendants to restrain them from committing any breach of the agreement of 26th August 1874 and in particular from carrying into effect the resolution appointing Messrs. H C & L as solicitors for the company, and to restrain them from doing anything inconsistent with the Memorandum and Articles of Association. The defendants contended that the contract of the 26th August 1874 had been determined by the death of M, and that the powers conferred on the agents by cl. 98 of the Articles were, subject to the general powers of management, vested in the directors by the Articles, and that the case was not one in which an injunction could be granted. Counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs sought to obtain the injunction on the ground that the resolution of the 8th August 1881 appointing Messrs. H C & L solicitors of the company, was contrary to the Memorandum of Association, and therefore ultra vires; and, in order that this point might be pressed against the defendants, it was proposed that the plaint should be amended by alleging a cause of action in two of the plaintiffs as shareholders as well as a cause of action in all the plaintiffs as parties contracting with the company. Held that, under the provisions of ss. 26 and 31 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), the amendment could not be allowed. The plaintiffs, as shareholders and contractors, had not the same cause of action, by which words were meant not only the act complained of, but also the right violated by that act. The rights of the plaintiffs as contractors, alleged to be violated by the resolution, were rights given to them by their agreement; but the rights of the plaintiffs as shareholders were rights secured to them by the Articles of Association. NUSSERWANJI v. that he was a license-holder. The present suit was brought against the Government represented by the Deputy Commissioner for damages on account of wrongful acts of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, who was made second defendant. The Judge, holding that where a servant does a wrongful act maliciously he is personally liable and the master is free, left it to the plaintiff to say against whom he would proceed. The plaintiff elected to proceed against Government and obtained a decree for a part of his claim. In the lower Appellate Court the Judges were divided in opinion, the Recorder holding that the first Court was justified in allowing the plaintiff to abandon his suit against the second defendant, to whom malice had been imputed, and that the suit was still maintainable against the Government; and the Judicial Commissioner, considering it irregular to allow this action, inasmuch as the claims for damages on account of the illegal and malicious acts of the second defendant and for damages for non-issue of license by the first defendant were inconsistent with each other. Held by the High Court that the view of the Recorder was correct. Nevertheless, the plaintiff ought not to have been put to the option of abandoning his suit against one or other defendant, but the suit should have been tried out. Held, too, that the allegations against the two defendants were distinct, but not inconsistent, and that the Judicial Commissioner had taken too strict a view of the plaint. VYTHEELINGUM v. (Act XIV of 1882) does not allow of a plaint or memorandum of appeal being returned to the plaintiff, or appellant, after a case has been heard on its merits, and just as the plaintiff or appellant discovers that the Court is about to pronounce an adverse decision. There is no provision in the Code for the return of a plaint to a plaintiff after it has been admitted, and the court-fee stamps thereon cancelled. Even if the Code allowed the High Court to return a plaint after the court-fee stamps have been cancelled, the plaint could not be again legally presented in any Court without new stamps being affixed to it. The plaint was accordingly returned, and additional stamps having been filed, the case was tried by the Principal Sudder Ameen. The Judge on appeal held that the plaint had been illegally returned by the Munsif, and that the act of the Principal Sudder Ameen in proceeding to try the case was illegal. He accordingly dismissed the suit. Held that the Munsif was right, under s. 31, Act VIII of 1859, in not dismissing the suit, but rejecting the plaint; and that, when the same plaint was filed with the proper amount of stamp duty in the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen, that Court had jurisdiction to try the case. *RAM GUTTY v. In a plaint claiming damage for an unsuccessful criminal prosecution of the plaintiff by the first defendant, and sanctioned by the second defendant as a Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff (though stating in the plaint that the second defendant "maliciously and without authority" sanctioned the prosecution, and that the Magistrate before whom it was brought held that there was no cause whatever for the charge) did not allege in the plaint that the first defendant prosecuted him (plaintiff) maliciously and without any reasonable or probable cause, or that the prosecution was sanctioned by the second defendant without reasonable or probable cause. Held that the plaint was properly rejected, and that there was no good ground for allowing the plaint to be amended, the plaintiff having delayed the filing of it until the last day but one allowed by the law of limitation. GIRDHARLAL DAYALDAS v. (a) and (b).—The plaintiffs brought a suit for an account, and approximately valued their claim at Rs. 16-15-0. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the claim was for recovery of money, and should have been valued at Rs. 1,000. He therefore called on the plaintiffs to make up the stamp to that required on this valuation; and the plaintiffs refusing, he dismissed their suit under s. 54 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Held that in any case the Subordinate Judge was wrong. If the suit was really one for an account, the plaintiffs were entitled to value the relief they sought approximately, as they had done; if it were not one for an account, but for recovery of money, still the Subordinate Judge had no power himself to value the relief sought, but

208. ———— Reference to document not in plaint—Claim for damages for malicious prosecution.—A Judge, in considering, under s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code, whether he should admit or reject a plaint, is wrong in referring to documents and facts not stated in, or annexed to, the plaint, nor ascertained by him by interrogation of the plaintiff, although such documents and facts may have been on record in other proceedings in the Judge's Court. In a plaint claiming damage for an unsuccessful criminal prosecution of the plaintiff by the first defendant, and sanctioned by the second defendant as a Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff (though stating in the plaint that the second defendant "maliciously and without authority" sanctioned the prosecution, and that the Magistrate before whom it was brought held that there was no cause whatever for the charge) did not allege in the plaint that the first defendant prosecuted him (plaintiff) maliciously and without any reasonable or probable cause, or that the prosecution was sanctioned by the second defendant without reasonable or probable cause. Held that the plaint was properly rejected, and that there was no good ground for allowing the plaint to be amended, the plaintiff having delayed the filing of it until the last day but one allowed by the law of limitation. *GIRDHARLAL DAYALDAS v. The defendants claimed portions of the land under different titles and pleaded misjoinder. The Court upon the Amn's report gave A the option to amend the plaint by withdrawing the suit against any particular sets of defendants. A elected to go to trial on the suit as brought and it was dismissed. Held that having regard to the provisions of ss 31 and 53 of the Civil Procedure Code the proper order of the Court should have been to reject the plaint and not dismiss the suit on the ground of misjoinder. SUDHENDU MONU RAY & DUNGA DAS I L R, 14 Cal, 435*

3. Penal Code, s. 211—False charge—Irregular procedure.—A prisoner, charged under s. 211 of the Penal Code with having brought a false charge with intent to injure, by accusing A of having caused the death of a person by doing a rash or negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide under s. 304A, stated at the trial that the original complaint made by him was false, and that he made it unthinkingly. The Sessions Judge treated this statement as a plea of guilty, and sentenced the prisoner to rigorous imprisonment. No record of the prisoner's plea, as required by s. 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code, appeared on the proceedings, nor did it appear that the charge had been explained as well as read to the prisoner, and the Judge considered that the original complaint did not amount to a false charge of an offence under s. 304A. 6. Qualified plea of guilty—Capital charge—Procedure—Practice.—In capital cases where there is any doubt as to whether an accused person fully understands the meaning and effect of a plea of guilty, it is advisable for the Court to take evidence, and not to convict solely on the plea of the accused. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BHADU . I. L. R., 19 All., 119

7. Plea of guilty—Murder—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Confession—Procedure.—The accused, who was a habitual ganja-smoker, was charged with the murder of his wife and infant son. In his confession he stated that he had killed his wife, because she quarrelled with him and objected to go to another village where he proposed a change of house on account of their poverty. He adhered to this statement when placed for trial before the Court of Session. The Sessions Judge treated this statement as a plea of guilty on the charge of murder, convicted the accused, and sentenced him to death, subject to confirmation by the High Court. Held (per JARDINE and CANDY, JJ.) that the accused's statement did not amount to a plea of guilty on the charge of murdering his wife. He alleged a sudden provocation: he ought therefore to have been put on his trial, in order that the Court might ascertain whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. 8. ———— Pleaders and their clients, their rights and obligations inter se—Bom. Reg. II of 1827—Confidential communications made in the course of professional employment.—The rules prevailing in England with regard to the rights and obligations of solicitors in relation to their clients apply, with slight difference, to pleaders practising in India. The principles deducible from the English cases are as follows: 1. A party to a judicial proceeding is entitled to such professional assistance as he thinks will best suit him. 2. A pleader is free to place his services at the disposal of any such party upon such terms as he may think most advantageous to himself consistently with the honour of his profession and the due administration of justice. 3. A pleader who receives any confidential information from his client in the course of his professional employment is not at liberty to carry that information into the service of his antagonist, or any one who in that very litigation or in any subsequent litigation may be opposed to the client furnishing the information. 4. Under Regulation II of 1827, pleaders receive certain fees, in return for which they are not at liberty to act against those retaining them, whether they are retained by one client singly or by two or more clients jointly. A pleader who has acted for several persons will not be restrained from afterwards acting for some of them only as against the others, unless it be shown that he is possessed of knowledge arising from his previous employment which might be prejudicial to his other clients. As a general rule, the Court will require a very strong case to be made out before it will interfere by way of injunction, restraining a pleader from appearing for a client, and there must be clear affidavits made to show that special knowledge was acquired by the pleader during his employment by the former client. In case of his possessing such knowledge, he will not be allowed to throw up the conduct of the case and transfer his services. He will never be allowed to discharge himself from the conduct of the case if the case raises even a probability of prejudice to his former employers. K, a pleader, was at first retained by P and N jointly to defend a suit on their behalf. At a later stage of the case, P and N quarrelled. Thereupon K applied to the Court for leave to withdraw from the conduct of the case, on the ground that he could not attend to the interests of both P and N. The Court allowed him to withdraw. A few days afterwards K appeared in Court, and filed a vakalatnama, or warrant of attorney, signed by N, and claimed to conduct the case on behalf of N alone. P objected to this, but the Court disallowed this objection. Thereupon P made an application to the High Court for an injunction restraining K from acting on behalf of N alone. Held that, as it was not made out that K was in possession of any confidential information either from P or from P and N together, such as would give him an unfair advantage when acting on behalf of N, the Court would not interfere or restrain K from serving N alone. Held, further, that a pleader in such circumstances should take the direction of the Court as to which of two or more clients he is to serve, and as to the disposal of the fees he has received from them jointly. *PALLONJI MERWANJI v. Plaintiff's pleader, however, sent intimation to the Court in writing that he had been appointed to act as a Subordinate Judge, and as he was going that day to join his appointment, he was unable to attend the Court. He therefore requested that the case should be adjourned till his return, or that a notice be issued to his client to enable him to make the necessary arrangements for the conduct of his case. Held that the pleader, having been temporarily appointed to act as a Subordinate Judge, was unable to attend the Court in consequence of a "necessary cause" within the meaning of s. 54 of Regulation II of 1827; and as he had sent the necessary notification in writing to the Court, the suit should not be dismissed, but adjourned for a reasonable time. IN RE NARAYAN SADASHIV KALE I. Neither ss. 2 and 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) nor ss. 58 and 76 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882) give the pleaders of the Bombay High Court that right. The provisions of s. 47 of Regulation II of 1827, authorizing persons holding sanads from the High Court to practise in the mofussil Courts, are still in force. Per BAYLEY, WEST, PINHEY, and LATHAM, JJ.—S. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, does not give every pleader a title to appear and plead; it only enacts that “pleader” means every person entitled to appear and plead for another in Court, and includes an advocate, a vakil, and an attorney of a High Court. Consequently, if pleaders or vakils, who are the same class of practitioners, are not entitled by law to appear or plead for another in Court, the definition of “pleader” gives them no new right or status. The words in s. 36 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) “by a pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf,” do not simply mean a person duly appointed by the party in the suit, but a pleader duly appointed according to the law regarding pleaders in force in the particular Court. Per PINHEY, SCOTT, and LATHAM, JJ. (WEST, J., dissentiente).—The High Court has the power of making rules for the admission of pleaders to practise in the Bombay Court of Small Causes; and the Bombay Court of Small Causes, under s. 9 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882), also has the power of making similar rules with the sanction of the High Court. 70. ———— Suit by pleader to recover fee from client—Legal Practitioners' Act (XVIII of 1879), ss. 27, 28, 29, 30—Agreement for fee—Agreement not in writing and filed in Court.—Ss. 27, 28, and 29 of the Legal Practitioners' Act (XVIII of 1879) do not relate to any arrangements or agreement made between a litigant and his own pleader as to the receipt of his fees which are actually allowed upon taxation. They do not provide as to matters which relate to the opposite party, or the fees that he has to pay to the legal practitioner of the opposite party, but provide what, as between the pleader and his client, shall be the method in which certain special arrangements are to be entered into. They make provision for arrangements between pleaders and their clients, which relate to the payment of remuneration in excess of and apart from the amount allowed in the taxation, and were framed upon the principle which regards with jealous scrutiny contracts brought about by persons holding positions of active confidence towards others, such as a pleader necessarily occupies in reference to his client. The plaintiff and the male defendants compromised the suit, and a decree was passed in terms of the compromise. By the compromise the costs of the widow were to be paid by the estate, and in estimating the costs, the lower Court allowed each widow a separate set of costs and calculated the amount to be paid to each as pleader's fees on the value placed on his claim by the plaintiff. On appeal to the High Court, Held that the pleaders of the widows were not employed in prosecuting or defending an original suit of the value of the plaintiff's claim so as to be entitled under s. 52, Bombay Regulation 11 of 1827, to a percentage on the amount that the plaintiff sued for according to the rates specified in Appendix I. The widows were in reality prosecuting a suit for their maintenance and their pleaders were entitled to a percentage only on the amount claimed by them for maintenance. Case remanded for the amount of the pleader's fees to be correctly calculated. When a case is decided on the merits, the full percentage is to be paid; in other cases one-fourth only should be paid under s. 7 of Act I of 1846. HANUMANDRA PARESHA RAM v BHAGUBAT. 1 L. 84. ——— Pleader's taidis—Mooktear—Legal Practitioners' Act (XVIII of 1879)—Ministerial duties of pleaders, Delegation of, to their bond fide clerks.—A Judge has a right to control his Court premises in such way as is most convenient to the public and to persons working there, but does not act rightly in passing any general order by which he excludes as a general body from his Court any portion of the community acting in an orderly manner. The pleaders of this country are a body of men who, from the earliest times, have combined in their own persons the duties performed in England by barristers and attorneys, and in acting in this second and ministerial capacity are, on their own responsibility, entitled to work through any number of clerks or taidis properly selected and paid by them; and no Court other than a High Court as established by Charter has the right to make rules defining the ministerial duties to be performed by them as distinct from the duties of their bond fide taidis or clerks, nor does the Legal Practitioners' Act of 1879 control in any way the privileges which have always existed in them or restrict their powers, the Act being one passed to bring mooktears under the control of the Court. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF KHODA BUX KHAN . . . A agreed with B that, if all the accused were acquitted, his fee was to be Rs500; if the two who were the relatives of C were acquitted, then he was to receive Rs250; but in the event of none of the accused being acquitted, he was to receive only Rs40. Before the trial B paid A Rs475; this having come to the knowledge of C, he telegraphed, saying that the fee was exorbitant, and A, upon being remonstrated with, handed over Rs250 to a banker to be placed to his (A's) credit. a letter to another vakil of that Court, who practised in District Courts subordinate thereto. The purport of this, which was one of several printed forms prepared for circulation to vakils practising in districts, was to the effect that the vakil, to whom it was addressed, "could easily send his clients' cases both civil and criminal," to the writer, who would conduct them in that Court. And, "as a remuneration," the fees paid by the clients would be shared between the writer and the vakil who had sent the cases. The Judicial Committee concurred substantially in the conclusions of the High Court that this was an incitement within s 116 (abetment) of the Penal Code to commit an offence made penal by s 36 (which was a special law within s 41 of that Code) of Act XVIII of 1879, the Legal Practitioners' Act. This misconduct had been aggravated by the appellant having denied to the Vakils' Association, North-Western Provinces and caused evidence to be called to negative, his having signed the printed letter, which he had signed. Thus, there was "reasonable cause" within s 8 of the Letters Patent of March 17th, 1866, establishing the High Courts, for his suspension, to which, for four years from the date of that Court's order, his punishment was reduced.

As to the fact of the appointment, it was not apparent at what stage of the suit the question had first been raised whether the deceased had been of sound and disposing mind at the time of making it. The first Court found that he had been of sound mind at the time, but the Chief Court on appeal reversed this finding and added that he had been, in their opinion, unduly influenced. As these questions, though not formally stated in the issues, had been sufficiently open upon the proceedings to give to each Court a right to form a judgment upon them, the Judicial Committee decided which was correct, and affirmed the finding of the first Court as to the soundness of mind of the deceased SAYAD MUHAMMAD v FATEH MUHAMMAD

_____ Pledgee taking over the property pledged, crediting the value as if it had been sold to him.—Wrongful conversion—Absence of proof of damages to pledgor—Account—Interest.—Where a pledgee, having power to sell for default, takes over, as if upon a sale to himself, the property pledged without the authority of the pledgor, but crediting its value in account with him, this act, though an unauthorized conversion, does not put an end to the contract of pledge, so as to entitle the pledgor to have the property back without payment. Government paper having been deposited by a borrower from a Bank as security, part was legally sold upon his failing to comply with the terms between them. As to the rest, the borrower, afterwards on redeeming a part, was led to believe that the paper returned was the whole of that which remained unsold in the bank's possession. The bank, however, had taken over part, as if sold to itself, crediting the price. Held that the bank could not after this treat the securities as still subject to the pledge; although this transaction had not put an end to the contract of pledge, so as to entitle the pledgor to have back the paper without payment of the loan and interest. The bank was no longer a pledgee of this paper, but, having converted it to the bank's own use, might have been liable in damages for the value, including the interest thereon. However, had this liability been enforced, the pledgor could not have had credit in the loan account for the proceeds of the paper. The cessation of interest on the loan was more to his advantage than to receive the interest on the paper, the market value of which was also falling, so that the longer the account had been kept open, the greater the balance would have been against the pledgor. It followed that there was no evidence of damage to him resulting from the conversion. The first Court decreed an account, wrongly deciding that interest could not run upon the loan, which the amount of the paper transferred by the bank to itself purported to wipe off, from the date of the transfer. On this point, as well as because there was no proof of damage to the pledgor, the High Court, reversing that decree, had rightly dismissed the pledgor's suit. NECKRAM DOBAY R. BANK OF BENGAL. . I. One of such constables not turning out to such extra drill was thereupon prosecuted and convicted of neglect of duty under s 29 Act V of 1861. Held that s 29 provided for no such offence and that any neglect of duty short of a violation of duty does not amount to an offence under that section. Held further, that the omission to attend such extra drill did not amount to an offence under that section as the words 'lawful order' used in the section mean an order which the authority mentioned therein is competent to make, and it did not appear that a District Superintendent of Police was competent to order his constables to cut down the jungle in the vicinity of their lines and on

2. ——— Power to make rules under Act of 1861—District Superintendent of Police, er of—A rule or regulation and a lawful order tinguished.—There is no express power given by t V of 1861 to any officer save the Inspector-General of Police to make rules; therefore the olation of a general rule alleged to have been made y a District Superintendent of Police to the effect hat constables are to be within the lines at a particular time or at roll-call is not punishable under s. 29 of the Act. Semble—The violation of a special order made by a District Superintendent of Police requiring the presence of an officer or of certain officers within the police lines and issued expressly to him or each of them would come within s. 29 of the Act as being not "a rule or regulation," but a "lawful order" made by a competent authority and stable was suspended and ordered to remain in the lines during suspension. Despite the order, he absented himself therefrom without leave. He was convicted under s. 29 of Act V of 1861. Held s. 29 of Act V of 1861 contemplates that the person to be charged with an offence under it must have been, at the time of his doing the act in respect of which the charge is preferred, a police constable within the meaning of that Act. When a police officer is suspended, he ceases to be a police officer; the conviction was therefore wrong. QUEEN-EMPRESS v.

(VIII of 1895), s. 13—Slaughter of cow—Open

"Open place," Meaning of—General police.—The slaughtering of a cow in an open verandah, so as to cause annoyance to the residents of the locality, and in spite of their remonstrances, is a breach of the law, being an act in an "open place" within the terms of
s. 34 of Act V of 1861 as amended by Act VIII of 1895.
The words "open place," coupled with "road, street, or thoroughfare," should not be interpreted ejusdem generis. It seems rather that the addition of these words was intended to have a wider significance, and this is shown by another amendment in the same section made at the same time in which the annoyance, etc., caused must be not to the residents and pas-possession" is no evidence of the fact. The question of possession is a mixed one of law and fact, and the evidence produced must give the various acts of ownership which go to constitute possession, so that the Court may arrive at its own conclusion. ISHAN

High Court held that evidence which did not allude to any specific acts of ownership was not sufficient evidence to prove possession. The finding of the fact of possession by the lower Appellate Court upon such evidence reversed on special appeal.

33. ———— Limitation—

Unoccupied and the right to which and uncultivated, person can be proved to have been exercised over it, it is often necessary, for the purpose of deciding the question of limitation, to rely upon slight evidence of possession, and sometimes possession of the adjoining land, coupled with evidence of title, such as grants of leases, and the Courts are justified in presuming, under such circumstances, that the party who has the title has also the possession. But where the land has been occupied, it is generally proper, for purposes of limitation, to deal with the question of possession as distinct from the question of title, for while the title may be in one person, a twelve years' possession may have barred that title. *MOHIMA CHUNDER DEX SINGAR v. 39. ————— Onus of proof.—

In a suit for possession of property the plaintiff relied on his previous twelve years' possession, and gave no further evidence of his title. Held that a previous possession for twelve years of the property sought to be recovered did not dispense with the necessity which lay on the plaintiff to prove his title to that property. 41. ————— Onus of proof—

Suit for possession.—Where a plaintiff seeks to recover possession upon a title recently acquired, he is not invariably required to prove the origin of his vendor's title. Long and undisturbed possession on the part of the vendor, when positive evidence of title cannot be had, may in many cases constitute proof of title. In a suit to recover immoveable property in the possession of the defendant, a plaintiff cannot ordinarily succeed merely by showing that the title has accrued to him. JOYKISHEN MOOKERJEE v. 45. ————— Lost records—

Proof of long possession.—The plaintiff claimed a right of pre-emption as safee-sharikh, or partner in the thing sold. The Court of first instance gave him a decree on the ground of long possession as proprietor. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decision on the ground that the plaintiff's title depended on a deed of purchase, which it was admitted had been set aside in a former suit in 1855, and that the plaintiff had failed to show that the decision in that suit had been reversed. The plaintiff proved that he had preferred an appeal from that decision, and alleged that it had been overruled; but there was no proof of the result of the appeal, as the records of that suit had been burnt in the Mutiny. Held on appeal to the High Court that, under the circumstances, proof of long possession as proprietor was sufficient. TUFANI SINGH v. The High Court on special appeal reversed the decrees of the Courts below, and remanded the case for a new trial on the point whether the plaintiff as a mirasidar or by local usage in virtue of his long possession and uniformity of payment of rent or assessment or otherwise, previously to the Court sale to defendant, had acquired the right to hold the lands in perpetuity on payment of a fixed or other rent ascertainable by local usage. *BARAJI v. under a pottah which had been granted to their ancestor in 1733 by the then talukhdars in respect of certain services to be performed by the grantees and their descendants. The Court of first instance found that the pottah was genuine, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge found that the pottah was a forgery, and that, although the lands had been granted to the defendants' ancestor in respect of services, yet the plaintiff was entitled to khas possession, as he did not require the services to be performed. He therefore decreed the plaintiff's claim. Held that the decree was right for having found that the pottah on which the defendants chiefly relied was a forgery, the Subordinate Judge was not bound, as a matter of law, to presume that the tenure was a permanent one merely from the fact of long possession of the lands. *NOBIN CHUNDER DUTT v. 53. — Buildings on land occupied under zamindars without evidence of grant—Evidence of reservation of interest.—Where there was no evidence of any grant, and the owner of buildings had been for upwards of twelve years in possession of the plots of land on which the buildings were situated without in any way paying rent to or acknowledging the title of the zamindars, he was prima facie entitled to the sites, and the mere fact that the sites were situated within the area of a permanently-settled mehal did not justify the presumption that the zamindars reserved to themselves reversionary right in the sites. GUR PARSHAD v. UMRAO SINGH . 7 N. W., 218

3. NATURE OF POSSESSION.

54. — Possession under deed afterwards set aside as fraudulent—Effect of decree setting it aside.—Where a person was in actual possession of property from the time when a deed conveyed it to him, a decision which declared that deed to be fraudulent did not have the effect of putting another claimant in possession; nor could possession be considered as having ceased in consequence of the decree, unless the holder were actually dispossessed under it; for the fact of the decree did not prevent the statute of limitation from running, and, in the particular case under consideration, the decree in question was still under appeal. MUKBOOL ALI v. WAJED HOSSEIN . 25 W. R., 249.

55. — Possession in execution of decree—Possession otherwise than by Court—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 230, 264.—Act VIII of 1859, s. 230, did not limit the applicant to any particular manner of obtaining possession; and s. 264 contained nothing to prevent the purchaser at an execution sale from obtaining possession if he could without the assistance of the Court. OBHOYA CHURN DEY v. RAJENDRO COOMAR GHOSE [22 W. R., 406]

56. — Possession without executing decree for possession.—So long as a plaintiff obtains possession after a decree establishing his right to it, it is immaterial for the purpose of limitation whether he obtained it by executing his decree, or whether possession was yielded to him. If afterwards dispossessed, his cause of action does not date from the decree, but from his dispossession. SALIG RAM v. MEHERN LALL . 2 Agra, 235

58. — Decree for possession, Non-execution of—Title—Possession taken by rightful owner without Court's intervention—Trespass—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9.—B purchased land from M and subsequently brought a suit against M to obtain possession. He got a decree, but did not execute it within three years. M died, and after his death and while his daughter (the plaintiff) was a minor, B took forcible possession of the land. Eight years afterwards the plaintiff attained her majority, and she then filed this suit to recover the land. The lower Court held that B, having failed to execute his decree for possession, was wrong in taking possession during the minority of the plaintiff without the intervention of a Court; that in so doing he was a trespasser; and that the plaintiff as M's heir was entitled to have possession given to her, until ousted in due course of law. Held (reversing the decree) that, subject to the provision of s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), there is no reason for holding that in India the rightful owner dispossessing another is a trespasser, and may not rely for the support of his possession on the title vested in him, as he clearly may do by English law. BANDU v. NABA [I. L. R., 15 Bom., 238.]

59. — Possession in execution of decree—Proclamation of sale—Suit for possession—Limitation.—In a suit for possession of certain lauds purchased by plaintiff at a sale in execution of a decree of the Sudder Ameen's Court, the lower Court held that "possession by proclamation of sale, through the Sudder Ameen's Court, was possession through the Court," and that the suit, being brought within twelve years of that proclamation, was in time. Held on appeal that such imaginary possession was no possession at all, and that the suit was barred by limitation. JOWHER ALY v. 60. — Proclamation of sale—Possession of auction-purchaser.—The possession of an auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree runs from the date of delivery, as provided by s. 246, Act VIII of 1859, i.e., by publication of sale certificate and proclamation by beat of drum, and not from the date of his possession. ASUDOLAH v. The shevaks contended that they had been in exclusive and uninterrupted possession of the land in dispute for more than twelve years and that by reason of such user they had acquired a quasi proprietary title at least as against the manager of the temple. The plaintiff was in Government service, and had been for a long time absent from his native place on duty the family property remaining under the management of the defendant. In 1863 the defendant wrote to the plaintiff requesting him to return and manage his share of the property or to employ some one to manage it for him. Nothing however was done by the plaintiff in the matter and the defendant continued in possession. In 1882 the plaintiff sued the defendant for partition. The defendant pleaded that the suit was barred contending that he had been in adverse possession from the date of the letter. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff's claim. The defendant appealed and the lower Appellate Court reversed the lower Court's decree holding that the suit was barred. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court—Held that the suit was not barred. The above mentioned letter of the defendant showed that up to the date at which it was written, the defendant had not been in possession of the property as his own property to the exclusion of the plaintiff and the mere circumstance that subsequently to the date of the letter the plaintiff had not participated in the profits would not in the absence of other evidence justify the inference that the plaintiff was then excluded. DIKKAR SADASHIV v. dispute. He sold it to G, who sold it to the plaintiff. A, however, continued in occupation of the property. In 1879 the plaintiff sued A and G for possession and obtained a decree. On the 6th April 1880, in execution of the decree, he was put in formal possession by the Court under s. 263 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) in the presence of A, who made no objection. At the time of these proceedings A's sons (the present defendants) were living with him in the house, and they continued to do so subsequently. A died in 1885, and his sons continued in possession of the property and cultivated it. On the 4th April 1892 the plaintiff brought this suit to eject them. They pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, contending that the execution-proceedings in 1880 did not bind them, as they were not parties to that suit. Held that, as the present suit would not have been barred against A had he survived, it was not barred against the defendants, whose rights were derived from him. The defendants living with their father had no independent juridical possession of the premises. The father A was the only person in possession. The possession which the plaintiff obtained through the Court from A in 1880 operated as well against the defendants (A's sons) as against A himself. PANDHARINATH v. MAHABUBKAN [I. L. 117. ——— Limitation—Possession under gift making valid title.—Of two brothers of a Mitakshara family, the younger who had been born deaf and dumb was disqualified from inheriting, but the action of the elder to the younger was such as to recognise for some years that the younger had a joint interest in the family property, although it was found that there was no intention shown by the acts of the elder brother to waive the rights accruing to him in consequence of his brother's disqualification. The brothers died and also a daughter of the elder brother, who was their only descendant. This daughter had an only son, who died before her, after taking, however, the whole family estate under a gift made to him with his mother's assent by his maternal grandfather in 1867. In 1882 the plaintiff, a collateral relation, sued the widow of the donee to obtain the estate of the younger of the brothers. The widow made title under the gift to her deceased husband, followed by his possession, and hers afterwards, since the date of the gift. Upon the facts found, the suit was held to be barred by limitation. LALA MUDDUN GOPAL LAL v. KHIRHINDA KOER

123. ——— Adverse possession—Possession of tenant paying rent to stranger.—In December 1853 certain lands were let by the plaintiff to B under a kabuliati, by the terms of which the lease expired in December 1863. In March 1875, less than twelve years from the expiration of such lease, the plaintiffs brought a suit for possession against B and the talukhdars of the estate of which the lands in dispute formed part. The latter alleged that the lakhiraj title of the plaintiff was invalid; that although no proceedings, as required by the Rent law, had been taken to invalidate the plaintiff's title, they, the talukhdars, had resumed possession of the land by receiving the rents from B from 1859; and that the suit was barred by reason of their possession since that date. Held that the suit was not barred, inasmuch as nothing had occurred to determine the tenancy which existed between the plaintiff and B, and that the possession of the latter was in law the plaintiff's possession. *PARBUTTI DAS v. 129 ——— Adverse possession of a partial interest (e.g. a tenant's) in land—Title by adverse possession asserted by a plaintiff against the true owner as well as alleged as a defence—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s 29 and art 144—Adverse possession for more than twelve years by one claiming to hold land as its full owner not only extinguishes the title of the true owner to the land so held and debars him from suing for its recovery but creates a title by negation in the occupant which he can actively assert, if he loses possession even against the true owner. A partial interest in land may be lost by adverse possession as well as the whole interest, and the right to such partial interest may be asserted by suit. So, where a landlord seeks to recover from his tenant possession of land in his tenant's occupancy, and the latter alleging a perpetual tenancy successfully resists on that ground the landlord's attempt to dispossess him, the tenant may after the statutory period has expired, plead limitation in bar of a subsequent suit in ejectment by the landlord. A landlord allowing the tenant to assert the validity of an invalid lease for the statutory period of more than twelve years may be debarred from subsequently questioning the right of the tenant to hold under its terms. BUNDESAI HANUMANTA

In the year 1882 the Collector declared the alienation to be illegal, and in the year 1893 ordered that the plaintiff should be reinstated in the possession of his share. At plaintiff's request, his share was given into the possession of the defendant, who was the plaintiff's brother and khatedar of the entire bhag. In the year 1893 the plaintiff brought this suit against the defendant to recover possession of his share. The defendant contended that the suit was time-barred, the plaintiff not having been in possession since the year 1871. Held that the suit was not barred, the possession of plaintiff's share being the possession of the plaintiff himself, and the defendant not being entitled to tack to the period of his own possession that of the plaintiff's share. MARAMAD DASU v AMANJI DASU I. the estates that came within the scope of the permanent settlement, it withdrew its sovereign right to vary the assessments; beyond that they did not go; they do not constitute a contractual relationship between the Government and the owners of permanently-settled estates, or any relationship as would debar Government from claiming and exercising against those owners the rights of an ordinary proprietor. Although therefore Government continues to receive the full revenue from the proprietor of a permanently-settled estate for the entire estate, the former is not precluded from claiming title by adverse possession in respect of any portion thereof. When a person is let into possession of a particular property by another claiming it to be his own, the former cannot contend, after the expiration of his tenancy, that the latter (i.e., the person alleging himself to be the owner) cannot acquire an adverse title against him as well as others by efflux of time. *Kally Churn Sahoo v. The first was redeemed by the father of defendant No. 1 alone in 1868; the second was redeemed by the defendant No. 1 more than twelve years before the suit. The parties were Mahomedans, and the plaintiff had a brother and three sisters only, one of whom (defendant No. 2) was a party to the suit. Defendant No. 1 contended that the suit was defective for want of parties, and that it was time barred. Held that the plaintiff's brothers and sisters ought to have been joined as co-plaintiffs, the defendant No. 1's possession after redemption not being adverse to them. If it was adverse at all, it was adverse to the whole of the plaintiff's branch of the family, so as to bar the right of the group altogether. But that was no reason why the co-owners should not be admitted as co-plaintiffs, and the suit go on upon its merits. BHAUDIN v. ISMAIL.

In 1859 R alone redeemed the property, and mortgaged it again to a third person. In 1882 the heirs of D and A brought a suit to redeem the whole of the property, or their portions of it. in it, as a lienor, and as such his possession was not adverse to them. It did not contradict but rather implied and preserved their ultimate proprietary right. In the case of a co-sharer holding after redemption limitation is computed only from the date when the possession becomes adverse by the assertion of an exclusive title and submission to the right thus set up in analogy to the provision which bars an excluded sharer generally after the lapse of twelve years from the time when he becomes aware of his exclusion. As long as possession can be referred to a right consistent with the subsistence of an ownership in being at its commencement so long must the possession be referred to that right, rather than to a right which contradicts the ownership. RAMCHANDRA YASHVANT SIRSOTDAR v SADASHIV ABaji SIRSOTDAR I L R., 11 Bom., 422

In 1856 the mortgagee D brought a suit on his mortgage against N and obtained a decree against her directing (inter alia) a sale of the house in the event of the non payment of the mortgage debt. N in consequence sold the house in the same year (1856) to R, and paid off the mortgage, who thereupon at her instance gave up the house to R. He held possession from 1856 to 1884. The defendant in 1884 purchased the house from R, who had bought it in 1856 from N. R's possession since that time had been adverse to the plaintiff. The plaint bore a stamp sufficient to cover a suit for recovery of possession. Held that, inasmuch as the effect of the refusal of the Collector to register the plaintiff's name under s. 78 of the Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876) was to prevent the plaintiff recovering the rent of the estate, and that such refusal was alleged in the plaint, the suit might be taken to be in substance a suit for recovery of possession, and ought not to have been dismissed. *Amir Hossein v. 165. ————— Presumption of title—Right of suit.—In a suit for possession of land claimed as part of a mouzah which plaintiff held under a mukurari lease and a bill of sale, and which he alleged had been taken possession of by defendant under colour of an order of the Criminal Court under s. 318, Code of Criminal Procedure, relating to a different land, defendant objected that plaintiff was not the real owner of the mouzah, and therefore not entitled to bring the suit. Held that the prima facie title which the plaintiff had under the lease and bill of sale was sufficient to enable him to bring the suit, and the defendant was not at liberty in a suit of this description to raise the question whether plaintiff was only the nominal owner. *RAM BHUROSSEE SINGH v. 166. ————— Possession after resumption—Right of zamindar to sue talukhdar for possession—A zamindar cannot sue a dependant talukhdar (the possessor of resumed lakhiraj lands) for confirmation of possession, and for an injunction to prevent him from committing waste. The only possession that a zamindar can obtain after a decree for resumption is a constructive one derived from the receipt of rent from the tenant. MUGNEE RAM CHOWDHRY v. GONESH DUTT SINGH

167. ————— Suit for possession by under-tenure-holder against zamindar—Unregistered tenant.—No suit for possession will lie against a zamindar, or any one holding a title under the zamindar, until the plaintiff has been recognized by the zamindar as tenant, or has been registered as such in the zamindar's serisht. MOOKTAKESHEE DOSSEE v. PEAREE CHOWDHRAIN . 7 W. R., 158

168. ————— Suit by prior mortgagee against subsequent mortgagee in possession—Sale in execution of decree under second of two mortgage-bonds—Right to possession.—An estate having been sold by auction on two occasions in satisfaction of two distinct bonds, and the person who had proceeded on the later-dated of the two bonds, but who represented the earlier auction-purchaser, having actually taken possession of the estate, —Held that though, in a properly brought suit between the two parties to declare the property liable for the amount of the first mortgage, the party in possession would have to pay to secure his possession, yet he could not be ousted by the opposite party. AJODHYA PERSHAD v. MORACHA KOER

169. ————— Suit by mortgagee for possession—Covenant for possession—Suit for possession after expiration of term of mortgage.—A mortgagor covenanted to give the mortgagee possession of the mortgaged property, but did not do so, and the mortgagee consequently sued him for possession, but not until the term of the mortgage had expired. The mortgagor set up as a defence to such suit that it was not maintainable after the expiration of the mortgage term. This defence was rejected on the ground that the mortgagor had, by his breach of the mortgage contract, put himself out of Court. HAR SAHAI v. CHUNI KUAR . I. L. R., 4 All., 14

170. ————— Dispossession of second mortgagee by prior mortgagee without right of possession by means of illegal order of Court in execution of a money-decree against mortgagor.—S mortgaged land to R in 1861. R pledged the mortgage-deed to H to secure repayment of a loan of Rs500. H, being entitled on partition with R to half of the debt due by R, got a decree against R in the Small Cause Court for his moiety in 1870. R sued S on the mortgage-deed (obtained from P and H for that purpose), got a decree to enforce the mortgage, and in July 1872 bought the land in execution of the decree. is no dispute as to the fact of actual possession of either the land or crop. ANONYMOUS

[4 Mad., Ap., 12

2. ———— Dispute as to right to collect rents—Order of Criminal Court as to—Report of police officer.—Where a dispute between parties was not concerning land or its boundaries, or concerning houses, water, fisheries, or produce of land, but simply as to what collections one of the parties had made and what rents he was entitled to collect under a decree of Court, the case was held not to come under the provisions of Act X of 1872, s. 539, but under the ruling in Ramrungle Dossee v. Gooroodass Roy, 18 W. R., Cr., 36. PUDOMONEE DASSEE v. JUGGODUMBA DASSEE

5. ———— Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 145—Tangible immovable property.—A dispute as to the right to collect rents is a dispute concerning tangible immovable property within the meaning of s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Harak Narain Singh v. Luckmi Bux Roy, 5 C. L. R., 287, and Sutherland v. Crowdy, 18 W. R., Cr., 11: 9 B. L. R., 229, referred to. Pramatha Bhusana Deb Roy v. Doorga Churn Bhattacharji, I. L. R., 11 Calc., 413, followed. Where a dispute arose as to the right to collect the rents of certain land, the ownership of which was claimed by both A and B, and the tenants who had been paying rent to A refused to pay rent to A and attorned to B,—Held that the conduct of the tenants in attorning to B was not an assertion of possession adverse to A such as to put an end to the relation of landlord and tenant between them and A and to A's right to collect the rents. Such attornment therefore did not deprive A of his right to have recourse to s. 145 in case of a likelihood of a breach of the peace, so as to have his possession of the right to collect the rents maintained pending proceedings in a civil suit. *SARBANANDA BASU MOZUMDAR v. 7. ———— Criminal Procedure Code (1898), s. 145—Jurisdiction of Magistrate—Appointment of Receiver of a joint estate—Joint owners governed by Mitakshara Law.—There is no want of jurisdiction in a Magistrate to proceed under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, because the dispute is one regarding the right to the collection of rents between joint owners governed by the Mitakshara school of Hindu law. Nor can the appointment of a Receiver of the joint estate, subsequent to the passing of the order by the Magistrate, affect the question of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate at the time when he passed the order. *SRI MOHAN THAKUR v. 8. ———— Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 145—Tangible immovable property.—A dispute as to the right to collect rents is a dispute concerning tangible immovable property within the meaning of s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the operation of that section cannot be limited by any rule which would depend upon the area of the property in dispute. Where, in such a dispute which related to two pergunnahs comprising more than three hundred distinct villages, it was admitted by the petitioner that the opposite party had been in possession by receipt of rent from the tenants up to a period some three months anterior to the institution of the proceeding, but she alleged that she had succeeded in inducing the tenants to attorn to her by payment of rent to the officers appointed by her since such period; and where the Deputy Commissioner, after recording a certain amount of evidence, refused to examine any more witnesses on the ground that the enquiry would extend to an inordinate length and be extremely expensive, and passed an order under the section,—Held that, even though it might be established that the Deputy Commissioner's action in excluding evidence was illegal, it did not follow, having regard to the circumstances of the case, that the High Court would be justified in exercising its revisional powers. Held further that a payment of rent for a short time to the petitioner, even if proved, would not amount to dispossession of the opposite party. *Sarbananda Basu Mozumdar v. The High Court ordinarily has no jurisdiction to interfere with an order under Ch VII of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), which is not a proceeding within the meaning of s 435 of the Code, but when the Magistrate exceeds his jurisdiction under s 144 or 145, the High Court has power to interfere under its revisional jurisdiction (s 439) IN RE PANDURANG GOVIND

19. ——— Dispute as to property of which each of two persons claimed the whole without allegation of joint possession—Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 530.—Where each of two parties claimed the same share of certain property as a whole estate, neither alleging that the other was joint with him in any way, and the Magistrate, without reference to the right of possession, went into the question of who was in possession, and maintained the possession of the party found in possession, the High Court held that the case fell under Act X of 1872, s. 530, and saw no necessity to interfere with the decision. A dispute having arisen in consequence, the Magistrate held an inquiry, and made an order under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code, awarding to A exclusive possession of the part of the land on which the edifice had been erected. Held per JACKSON, J., that such order was erroneous, as the matter was not one to which s. 530 could apply. 24. ——— Dispute as to building site—Persons not parties to proceedings—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 145, 147.—In a suit to recover a building site, an injunction was issued by the Court restraining the defendants from building on the land pending the decision of the suit. On appeal, the injunction was dissolved on the ground that the defendant was in possession. Subsequent to this order, the District Magistrate, on the complaint of the plaintiff against the defendant, passed an order under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, declaring that K and F were in possession, and forbidding all disturbance of their possession until the decision of a Civil Court. Held that, K and F not being parties to the proceedings, the order was illegal. Held also that, if a breach of the peace appeared likely to occur, the proper course was for the Magistrate to take security from the party from whom a breach of the peace was apprehended, but that it was not illegal for the Magistrate to proceed under s. 145 or s. 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The following, however, was a later holding under the Code of 1872 with regard to a police report.

37. ————— Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, s. 530—Record of grounds—Police report, Incorporation of—Evidence of possession—Evidence of title.—In proceedings under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate recorded the following words: "Whereas from the police report a breach of the peace is probable," and found that certain persons were in possession. Held that, although the record of grounds was unsatisfactory, as the initial proceeding did not contain within itself all which the law requires to be recorded, —viz., in the first place, that the Magistrate is satisfied that a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace exists; and in the second place, the ground upon which he is so satisfied,—yet that, as the police report from which the grounds for apprehending a breach of the peace appeared was incorporated by reference, the final order was not defective. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF KALI KRISTO THAKUR v. GOLAM ALI CHOWDHURY [I. L. R., 7 Calc., 46; 8 C. L. R., 245

And under the Code of 1882, the Magistrate is now to be "satisfied on a police report or other information."

38. ————— *Police report setting out probability of breach of peace.—Semble—*That a reference by a Magistrate to a police report which clearly sets out the probability of a breach of the peace is a sufficient statement of the reasons for the Magistrate's being satisfied of the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, within the meaning of s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882. *GOLUCK CHUNDER PAL v. 56. ——— Parties concerned—Criminal Procedure Code (1882), s. 145—Initial proceedings—Adding parties during the course of the proceeding.—Before initiating proceedings under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is the duty of the Magistrate not only to be satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists, but also to ascertain, as far as possible, who are concerned in the dispute. The Magistrate has no power to add parties during the course of the proceeding unless in the initial proceeding he is satisfied that they are concerned in the dispute. If in the course of the proceedings it appears to the Magistrate that it is absolutely necessary that other parties should be required to attend, the only course open to him is to initiate a new proceeding. *Ram Chandra Das v. 89 ——— Criminal Procedure Code (1882), ss 145 and 146—Possession, Inquiry as to—Time at which Magistrate is to determine who was in possession—Order passed under s 145 on proceedings taken under s 145, Criminal Procedure Code—Attachment of property

It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule which may be applicable to all cases as to the exact point of time to which an inquiry under s 145 must be directed, and the time at which possession must be found in one party or the other must be governed by the facts of each particular case. To hold that the Magistrate is precluded from inquiring into anything before the date when he actually commenced his own proceedings might in some cases lead to a person who has been acting in an unwarrantable manner misusing the process of the law to enable him to carry out a hostile and improper scheme which could never have been the intention of the Legislature. In a proceeding under s 145 regarding a dispute between two parties concerning certain collieries, it appeared that the first party were certainly in possession of the collieries which contained the office where the business of the collieries was transacted, and the second party were books and papers of the business were kept, and that the second party had during a period of about fourteen days prior to the commencement of the proceedings succeeded in obtaining possession of the pits, wharves, tramways, etc., of the colliery by what the Court considered to be a high-handed and improper scheme, and acting in an unwarrantable manner. The Magistrate, considering himself bound to find who was in actual possession at the date of the commencement of the proceedings by himself, passed an order in favour of the second party. He'd that such order was bad, and that, as the second party was undoubtedly not in possession of the whole of the property in dispute, and the effect of it was to place them in possession of the portion that was in the possession of the first party, the proper order to make under such circumstances was one under s. 146, attaching the property. *KATRAS JHERRIA COAL CO. v. 90. Criminal Procedure Code (1882), ss. 145 and 146—Possession, Inquiry as to—Time at which Magistrate is to determine who is in possession—Presumption.—A Magistrate, in making an order under the Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 145 and 146, must inquire into the question which party was in actual possession at the time of the institution of the proceedings, and not at the time when the order is made. In making this inquiry, the Magistrate may presume that, when a vendor sells part of a property, he retains all that he does not sell. AGRA BANK v. LEISHMAN

91. Final order against persons not made parties—Criminal Procedure Code (1898), ss. 145, 146.—A final order under s. 143, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be made against persons who were not made parties to the proceedings under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, or who were in the case regarded by the Magistrate as such, though notices had been issued upon them to file written statements and they had only entered appearance, but had done nothing else. *JANOKI NATH ROY v. 137. — Dispute in respect of colliery—Order under s. 144—Prohibition to both parties from exercising right of possession—Proceedings under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure—Date of possession—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1899), ss. 144, 145, 146—On the 10th of November 1899, the Magistrate passed an ex parte order under s. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by which both parties to a dispute were prohibited from exercising any right of possession in respect of a colliery. Subsequently proceedings under s. 145 of the Code were instituted in respect of the same colliery and between the same parties. On the 29th of January 1900, the Magistrate, having found that the second party had been in possession on the 10th of November 1899, passed an order declaring them to be in possession. Held that the proper way of dealing with this case in interpreting the Magistrate's order was to hold that, whereas by reason of the operation of his order under s. 144 of the Code of the 10th of November 1899 no evidence could be offered to show the possession of either party from that date up to the 29th of December, he was consequently obliged to ascertain the possession immediately before this order and to regard his intervention as an attachment suspending the previous possession, whatever it might be, but that, at the same time, the former possession continued and although the lawful exercise of its rights had been forbidden for a time, the possession had never ceased to exist. 146. ——— Criminal Procedure Code (1882), s. 147—Easement—Procedure to be observed by Magistrate when dispute exists regarding an easement—Parties entitled to notice.—The inquiry contemplated under s. 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is a judicial inquiry, and the opinion formed by a Magistrate must be a judicial one based on evidence legally recorded by him in the manner provided by s. 356, and on due notice to the persons who respectively claim or deny the right, the subject of the dispute. Notice to servants of such persons is not equivalent to notice to them, and in such cases actual notice should be given to all the persons claiming or denying the right and interested in the subject-matter of the inquiry. Magistrates should not institute proceedings under s. 147, unless they are satisfied that a real danger of the evil, for the prevention of which the procedure was devised, does in fact exist. Such inquiries may lead to injustice being done from defective procedure, and a Magistrate would be wise not to use the section in cases where it must involve a long and complicated inquiry and the presence of a large number of people, when the remedy of binding down a few persons to keep the peace is ready to his hand. The right of use of land contemplated by s. 147 is one of an entirely different description resembling a right of easement, not one arising from the terms of a contract between landlord and tenant. A dispute between the landlord and tenant regarding the right of the latter to erect or re-erect a gola which has fallen down is not a matter properly coming within s. 147 of the Code. It need not be made at the same time as the conviction. The case possession at the date of conviction. In such a case the section gives the Magistrate power to order possession to be restored to the complainant. In the case of a proper order, third persons could not be affected, if they are the order is not thereby necessarily invalid. Cl. 2 of the section gives them a remedy by civil suit. On 27th September 1897 complainant charged one R with criminal trespass under s. 447 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). He alleged that in the previous July R had entered into possession of the land and sowed rice upon it, and that, when in the month of September 1897 he (the complainant) went to the field, R had turned him out by force and refused to vacate the land. On the 17th November 1897 the case was heard by the Third Class Magistrate, who convicted R of the offence charged. On the following day (18th November 1897) the complainant applied to the Magistrate under s. 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) to be restored to possession of the land and of the standing crops. The Magistrate ordered possession of the land to be restored to the complainant, but attached the crops under Ch. XLIII of the Criminal Procedure Code. Thereupon one P intervened, and claimed the crops as having been sown by himself. His claim was disallowed and the crops were ordered to be sold and the proceeds credited to Government under ss. 523 and 524 of the Code. Held that the order made by the Magistrate under s. 522 restoring possession of the land to the complainant was valid, because it did not appear that the offence of which the accused was convicted was attended with criminal force, and that the dispossession was due to the use of such force. The illegal entry complained of had taken place in July 1897. The accused then took possession, and in September, being then still in possession, forcibly resisted the complainant when he attempted to enter upon the land. The complainant, however, did not charge the accused with this assault, but with the trespass which had taken place in July. It is only when the actual use of criminal force leads to dispossession that an order under s. 522 can be made. Held also that the order passed under ss. 523 and 524 with reference to the crops were illegal. The crops were not property in respect of which the offence was committed, nor were they used in the commission of the offence. They were not such property as is referred to in s. 517, 523, or 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Held also that the Third Class Magistrate as such had no authority to make an order under s. 524.

Where, however, the decision under s. 145 was passed on the 19th December 1893, and the application for costs was made on the 21st December, but owing to delay arising from the action of the objectors the order for costs was not made until the 16th June 1894, but then by the same Magistrate who passed the order under s. 145,—Held that the order was not void for want of jurisdiction, and there being no suggestion that it was unjust or improper on the merits, the Court declined to interfere with it in the exercise of their discretionary power of revision under s. 439. *BINODA SUNDARI CHOWDHURANI v. 1. — Construction of power —
Power to sell or mortgage ship.—In construing power-of-attorney, the special purpose for which the power is given is first to be regarded, and the most general words following the declaration of that special purpose will be construed to be merely all such powers as are needed for its effectuation. Where the owner of a ship by power-of-attorney constituted the master his agent, and authorized him to raise or borrow upon the ship's papers such sums of money as he should deem necessary for the repair of the ship, "and to act in the premises as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as I might or could do if personally present." In a suit for the amount of a mortgage-bond upon the ship executed by the master, — Held that the master had no authority to sell or mortgage the ship. JUDAH v. ADDI RAJA QUEEN BIBI 2 Mad., 177

2. — — — — — Power to refer to arbitration.—T, having frequent occasion to prosecute and defend suits in different Courts and being unable to give his personal attention to them, executed a power of attorney in S's favour, whereby he authorized S to watch the cases on his behalf, to appoint any pleader or mooktear, to receive, after giving a receipt for the same, any money deposited for, and due to, him from the Courts, to act on his behalf in cases of dakhil kharij, and obtain the entry of his name after getting the names of other persons expunged, to purchase villages with the money due under decrees, to file on his behalf receipts, acquittances, raji namahs, and other documents, and to get back deeds and decrees and give receipts and acquittances. Held that the terms of the power-of-attorney did not authorize S to refer questions to arbitration. THAKOOR PERSHAD v. KALKA PERSHAD 6 N. W., 210

3. — — — — — Power to sue given to an agent, Extent of.—Vakil, Reasonable remuneration to, under such power.—A mere power to sue does not authorize an agent to do more than employ a vakil on the terms of paying him a reasonable remuneration. KESHAY BARUJI v. NARAYAN SHAMRAY [I. L. R., 10 Bom., 18

4. — — — — — Authority to enter into special agreement with vakil.—Agreement to remunerate according to proportion recovered.—The defendant, on behalf of her minor son, gave to S M a power-of-attorney by which she authorized S M, "for her and in her name and on her behalf to appear in or sue or defend . . . any suit, appeal, or special appeal, . . . and to act in all such proceedings in any way in which she might, if present, be permitted or called on to act." Held that the above power did not authorize S M to enter into a special agreement with a vakil, under which the vakil (in an appeal which he was employed to conduct for the defendant on behalf of her minor son) was to receive for his services a minimum reward of Rs. 100, and, in cases of success, a reward proportional to the amount awarded by the Appellate Court. RAY SAHEB V. N. MANDLIK v. KAMALJAHAT SAHEB NIMBALGAR 10 Bom., 28

5. — — — — — Power to execute bond.—Under a power-of-attorney executed by twenty proprietors of a joint estate, empowering their general manager to raise loans for the purposes of the estate upon bonds, and to sign their names or his name on their behalf, and to pledge the whole or any part of the estate by such bonds, the attorney executed a bond on behalf of three of the proprietors. Held that under the power-of-attorney the manager was not authorized to execute a bond on behalf of any one or more of the proprietors making him or them responsible for the whole money borrowed to the exclusion of the rest. Held, further, that in a suit upon a bond so executed, the plaintiffs were not entitled to rely upon the general power which the manager might have, as the manager's authority must be considered as strictly confined to the terms of the power-of-attorney. BUDHI SINGH DUDHURIA v. DENENDRA NATH SANGUL 11 C. L. R., 323

6. — — — — — Mooktearnama.—Execution of bond to secure barred debt.—Contract Act, s. 25.—A mooktearnama empowering the mooktear to execute bonds in lieu of former debts does not authorize the mooktear to execute a bond to secure a debt already barred by limitation. Where, however, a suit is brought upon a bond executed to secure a former debt, it must be shown by the person alleging it that such debt was barred. HUBLAL SIKUL v. RAM GORI DEX ROY 11 C. L. R., 581

7. — — — — — Mooktearnama.—Authority of agent.—Power to make gift.—A mooktearnama merely gave the mooktear power to grant ticea ijara leases and, when advisable, to sell, mortgage, and make gift of the whole or portion of the property of the principal. Held that the mooktear had no power to create a permanent tenure. The power of making a gift given by the mooktearnama authorized the mooktear formally to execute a deed of gift only when the disposing power had been exercised by the principal TEENUNNESSA v. KANTZ PATIMA 13 C. L. R., 247

8. Power to dispose of property—Authority to pledge—A power of attorney authorized the holder "to dispose" of certain property in any way he thought fit. Held that the holder of such power had no authority to mortgage the property. A power of attorney must be construed strictly. MAZUKHAND BIN GYANMAL v. SHAN MOGHAN VARDRAJ

9. Power to "sell, endorse, and assign" negotiable securities—The payee of promissory notes of the East India Company, bearer. The agents, in their character of private bankers, borrowed money of the Bank of Bengal, offering as security, these promissory notes. The Bank made the advance, and the agents endorsed the notes, such endorsement purporting to be as attorney for their principal, and deposited them with the Bank, by way of collateral security for their personal liability, at the same time authorizing the Bank, in default of payment, to sell the notes in and sold notes, agreeing to sell by order and on account of N & Co to the defendant, twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares, and agreeing to buy, by order and for account of N & Co, from the defendant, twenty five Muir Mill Cotton shares in three months' time at an advanced rate, the bought and sold notes bearing the same date and being one transaction. The transfer deeds were signed by a partner in the firm of N & Co as attorney for the plaintiff, and N & Co received the purchase money of the shares. Previous to the time fixed for the sale of twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares by the defendant to N & Co, the latter became insolvent. The plaintiff then brought a suit to recover the shares from the defendant. Held by GARTIN, C.J., that the transaction between N & Co and the defendant was not justified by the power of attorney the contract not having been entered into "for and on behalf and in the name of the plaintiff" within the meaning of the power and that the transaction was either an actual loan or a transaction in the nature of a loan for the purpose of raising money. Per WILSON, J., that the defendant took no title to the shares for two reasons: (i) because a power to sell is only a power to sell in the ordinary course of business, i.e., for a money price, (ii) because it was the duty of the defendant seeing that the shares were sold to him under a power, to see that he paid the price to the plaintiff or his attorney. JUNNA DOSS v. ECKFORD I. L. R., 8 Cal., 1

12. Meaning of the word "negotiate" with reference to Government other things, certain Government securities standing in his name B pledged the securities for an advance of ₹19,000, and at the same time executed a promissory note for the amount of the loan, the promissory note being signed "B, as attorney for W". In a suit by W to recover the Government security, Held in the Court below that the power of attorney was sufficiently wide to cover the transaction, that the transaction was a fraud on the part of B, but that the transferee (the defendant) had no notice of the fraud, and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed. Held on appeal per WHITE, J.—(i) That the words of the power were to be read disjunctively, and the powers conveyed by the words were to be treated as joint and several, (ii) that even supposing the word "negotiable" to be applicable to transactions with Government securities (which was doubtful) and that such Government securities stood in the same position as ordinary commercial notes, being irrecoverable from W, because unauthorized, the defendant could not return the Government securities which were deposited as security for the loan, he not having taken the precaution to ascertain the amount of their loan. Held that the endorsement of the notes by the agents of the payee to the Bank was within the scope of the authority given to them by the power of attorney, and that the payee could not recover in detinue against the Bank. The rule laid down in the case of Gill v. Cubitt, 3 B. & C., 46th, and Down v. Halling, 4 B. & C., 330, that the negligence of a party taking a negotiable instrument fixes him with the defective title of the party passing it, observed upon, and those cases declared to be no longer law. BANK OF BENGALE: MACLEOD 5 Moore's I. 11. Principal and agent—"Purchase, sell, endorse, and transfer"—Meaning of "Power to sell."—N & Co having a joint and several power of attorney from the plaintiff authorizing them "to purchase sell, endorse, and transfer for the plaintiff, and in the plaintiff's name and on the plaintiff's behalf," all shares standing in his name in the books of any public company or society, entered into a contract embodied in bought whether B had authority to enter into that transaction. Per GARTH, C.J.—That although, on the authority of The Bank of Bengal v. Fagan, 5 Moore's I. A., 27, a power to negotiate Government securities would authorize the negotiation of Government securities by way of pledge, yet W was entitled to a decree, on the ground that A and B had no power, under the power-of-attorney, to borrow money in the name of W; and that therefore the defendant was not entitled to retain the security given for the advance (viz., the Government promissory note). WATSON v. JONMENJOY COONDoo. I. L. R., 8 Calc., 934

On appeal to the Privy Council,—Held that, with regard to the general objects of the power, B had under it no authority to pledge, and that the lender of the money acquired no title to the note as against W. The power-of-attorney was not in the same form as that in the Bank of Bengal v. Macleod, 5 Moore's I. A., 1. and Bank of Bengal v. Fagan, 5 Moore's I. A., 27, not containing, in express words, power to indorse. Had it done so, the question would have been whether there was anything to prevent it from being a power, in the discretion of the donee of it, to indorse the note, and convert it into one payable to bearer, whenever he thought fit to do so, for any purpose. It was not laid down in the judgment in those cases that the words used in a power-of-attorney, to express its objects, are always to be construed disjunctively, though they may be so construed; and there is no reason why a rule of construction, intended to aid in arriving at the meaning of the parties, should not be applied in construing a power-of-attorney as much as any other document. JONMENJOY COONDoo v. WATSON

[I. L. R., 10 Calc., 901

13. ————— Principal and agent—Bank manager acting as private agent—Transaction for benefit of Bank—A, being in uncontrolled management of the National Bank in Calcutta and purporting to act under a power-of-attorney intended to be given to him in his private capacity, but addressed to him as "acting manager of the National Bank" by B, a constituent of the Bank, without drawing any cheque on B's account and simply by means of transferring in the books of the Bank Rs15,000 from B's deposit account with the Bank to the account of one C who was indebted to the National Bank, purported to make an advance of Rs15,000 from B to C, whereas, in fact, the real transaction amounted only to transferring the liability of C to that extent from the Bank to B. Held that, so far as this transaction was concerned, A could not divest himself of his character of Bank manager, and that, acting as the agent of both parties, he acted to the prejudice of B and to the advantage of the Bank, and that there was, in fact, a breach of his duty to B to which the Bank was a party. Held also that A was not able under the power-of-attorney to bind B by consenting to any dealings by the Bank or C with goods in the Bank's godowns which would prejudice B. BEER v. NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA

[19 W. R., 67

14. ————— Stamp—Operation of power confined to British India—Stamp Act

POWER-OF-ATTORNEY—concluded.

(Id of 1879), s. 5.—It is not necessary for the Courts in India to consider whether a power-of-attorney issued in England, but which is intended to operate in British India, complies with the fiscal requirements of the stamp laws in England. It is sufficient if such power-of-attorney is stamped according to the stamp laws of British India. Bristow v. Sequenville, 5 Ex., 275, and James v. Catherwood, 3 D. & R., 190, followed. Clegg v. Levy, 3 Camp., 166, not followed. Semble—If such a power-of-attorney was intended to operate in England, as well as in British India, it would not be invalid, so far as it was intended to operate in British India, because the requirements of the stamp laws in England had not been fulfilled. It would be sufficient if it complied with the requirements of the Indian law. IN THE GOODS OF MCADAM promoveants for salvage services rendered by them—Held (following the more recent English practice) that the claims should not be consolidated against the will of the promoveants but should be heard one after the other successively subject however to one set only of costs being allowed to them in the event of the Court finding at the hearing that the application for consolidation was resisted without sufficient grounds. In such a case (as there is no procedure for such an application prescribed by the Rules and Regulations made in pursuance of 2 and 3 Will IV c 51, nor any procedure for consolidation in the Civil Procedure Code) the practice of the Court of Admiralty in England ought to be followed so far as such practice can be applied to this country by analogy IN THE MATTER OF THE BRITISH SAILING SHIP FALLS OF ETRICK THE CHUSAN v FALLS OF ETRICK [L L R., 22 Calc, 511]

10. ——— Non-production of affidavit—Withdrawal of suit.

—The plaintiff's attorney being under the misapprehension that one of the plaintiffs, who was a material witness, was in Bombay, when in fact he was in England, and an application to consent to a commission had been made to the defendant's attorney, and refused on the eve of the hearing, an application was made to the Judge in Chambers on the morning of the day fixed for the hearing, and supported by an affidavit, for the issuing of a commission and for an adjournment of the suit; and the Judge declining to make an order in Chambers, the application was renewed in Court, when the Judge refused to take notice of what occurred before himself in Chambers, and made note that the application for a commission was made upon no affidavit; and as the affidavit (presented in Chambers), having been sent to the office of the plaintiff's attorneys for a copy to be made and served upon the defendant, was not then in Court, the application for a commission and to adjourn the hearing was refused, and plaintiff's counsel not being instructed to proceed with the hearing, and leave to withdraw the suit having been also refused, the suit was dismissed. Held that the Judge was wrong in refusing to postpone the case for the production of the affidavit in Court, and that there was no legal ground whatever for the refusal to withdraw the suit, which was accordingly restored to its place in the list and remanded in order to be tried. *DADABHAI NAOROJI & Co. v. 11. ——— Application for decree on terms of agreement to compromise suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 375.

—After the hearing of the suit had begun, the plaintiffs and defendants came to an agreement by which they settled all the matters in dispute between them in the suit. The agreement was in writing, and dealt in one clause with the dispute, the subject-matter of the suit, and in a second clause, with another dispute of long standing between the parties, with which the suit had nothing to do. The plaintiffs subsequently objecting to consent to a decree being taken in terms of the first clause of the agreement, the defendants took out a rule nisi, calling on the plaintiffs to show cause why the agreement should not be recorded in Court and why the Court

It is the duty of the Court under that section to determine whether the applicant should be allowed to interrogate the other side, but not to determine at that stage what questions the party interrogated should be compelled to answer. Where an ex-parte order is made in chambers giving leave to interrogate, the party ordered to answer has a right to come into Court to have the order set aside if the case is one in which interrogatories should not have been allowed. When an order for the administration of interrogatories is properly made, a party objecting to the interrogatories administered may, at his peril, omit to answer the interrogatories to which he objects; but the more prudent course is to file his affidavit in answer, stating in it his objections to answer such questions as he objects to. Where interrogatories are scandalous, or in any way an abuse of the process of the Court, the Court may interfere at any stage. some Government promissory notes, which had been deposited as security for certain loans, and claimed a specified sum as damages or in the alternative a decree for an account. The defendant bank denied the alleged agreement, and asserted that the notes had been sold after due notice and on failure of the plaintiff to comply with the terms on which the loans were made. Interrogatories were administered for the examination of the plaintiff, and amongst them one in the following terms: "State how your estimate of damages to the amount of Rs. 1,30,000 mentioned in the eighth paragraph of the plaint is arrived at?" Upon the plaintiff declining to answer that interrogatory, the defendant bank applied on notice for an order under s. 127 of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring him to answer it fully. Held that the plaintiff was not bound to answer it. If, on the one hand, it was intended to elicit the principle on which the damages were estimated by the plaintiff, the defendant was not entitled to discovery on that point. If, on the other hand, it was sought to elicit an account of the transactions between the parties, it was unnecessary, as the transactions were within the knowledge of the defendant bank; and if it were not, then the enquiry was premature, as the question whether there had been any wrongful act committed and whether the plaintiff was entitled to any damages should be first determined. *NECKRAM DOBAY v. 90. ———— Suit instituted on behalf of minor by next friend—Application for execution of decree by plaintiff on attaining majority and after death of next friend without complying with requirements of s. 451, Civil Procedure Code—Title of suit.—Unless there is an absolute bar created by positive enactment, a person who has attained his 'full age is prima facie entitled to proceed with a suit instituted on his behalf during his minority, or to make any application therein, and, if necessary, the Court will, as a matter of course, give him leave to proceed or act in his own name. When a person, on whose behalf a suit had been revived and carried on by his next friend, made, after attaining his majority, and long after the death of the next friend, an application in his own name for execution of the decree in the suit without having complied with the requirements of s. 451 of the Civil Procedure Code as to electing to proceed with the suit and obtaining leave of the Court to do so, and the application was admitted and notice of execution given to the defendant,—Held, under the circumstances, that such omission to comply with the requirements of s. 451, though an irregularity, was not a bar to the application being allowed to proceed. An application, under s. 451 for leave to proceed with a suit, does not require any notice, but may be made ex-parte at any time. Even if the application in this case therefore were not itself a sufficient indication that the applicant elected to proceed with the suit, and that the Court in allowing him to proceed in his own name gave him the required leave (and semble that would be the case), the Court could give such leave at the hearing of the application nunc pro tunc. any time before the hearing. This order purported to be made under s. 549 of the Civil Procedure Code, but neither the application nor the order stated the amount of the security required. At the hearing of the appeal, no security having been lodged, the respondent objected that, with reference to the terms of s. 549, the Court had no option but to dismiss the appeal. Held that the proper course was to have applied to the Judge who passed the order for security, at any time before the case came on for hearing, for the rejection of the appeal, and that it was too late at the hearing to ask the Court to reject the appeal. THAKUR DAS v. 17. — Transfer by compromise—

ment of the share L and R found funds for the prosecution of two suits in respect of the share, which on the 5th April 1832 were compromised, B getting 1 anna and 3 pies out of the 12 annas originally claimed by her. In that compromise B stated as follows: “I make over 1 anna to L and R, my partners in lieu of the prosecution of the two cases. I, the plaintiff shall remain in possession of the remaining 3 pies.” Meanwhile, on the 3rd September 1831, G had sold 3 annas out of the 12 annas share to M. On the 3rd April 1833 M brought a suit against L and R, claiming the right of pre-emption in respect of the 1 anna which they had acquired from B on the allegation that the transfer of the share had taken place on the 5th April 1832. This claim was based on the waqf-ul-uruz of the village which gave a right of pre-emption the interest in the share between B and L and R that the real transfer to L and R was given effect to on the 1st September 1831, and that, this having been prior to the acquisition by M of any right in the village, he was not a co-sharer at the time of the transfer, and that he had consequently no right as against L and R by way of claim for pre-emption.

Act XXIII of 1861, s. 14—Conditions required by Mahomedan law.—If a person claiming pre-emption under the provisions of s. 14 of Act XXIII of 1861 fulfilled the conditions of sale respecting the deposit of the purchase-money, the sale could not be held void merely by the failure of the person to whose bid the property was knocked down also to complete the deposit. All that the claimant was bound to do was to establish that he was a pattidar within the meaning of the section in the estate of which the property sold formed part, and that he had fulfilled the conditions of sale. If he established this, the sale should be confirmed in his favour, unless some irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale was shown which would justify the setting aside of the sale. The conditions of pre-emption under the Mahomedan law did not apply to a claim brought under the section. DABEE PERSHAD v. BISHESHVAR PERSHAD SINGH

—It was incumbent on an officer conducting a sale in execution of decree, of land which was a share of a pattidari estate paying revenue to Government, as defined in s. 2 of Act I of 1841, to take notice of a claim made by a person under the provisions of s. 14 of Act XXIII of 1861, and to receive the purchase-money as a fulfilment of the conditions of the sale, subject to any question which might be raised by any party interested in the sale as to the claimant's title to advance the claim. When the whole of the purchase-money has been paid by the claimant within due time, the Court executing the decree, unless it is satisfied that he has no right to advance the claim, cannot treat the payment by him as a nullity, but must accept it as a fulfilment of the conditions of the sale respecting the purchase-money, and the sale is not defeasible by the failure of the bidder to complete the deposit of the purchase-money. The sale to the claimant cannot become absolute until it has been confirmed, and until it has become absolute, he cannot maintain a suit for possession. If the claimant has fulfilled the conditions of sale, and his right is clear, the Court executing the decree is bound to give effect to the right. TASUDUR ALI v. MUKSUD ALI

29. ——— Sale in execution of decree.

—During the minority of two out of four brothers an ikrarname was entered into between them to the effect that no separation was to take place without the consent of all, and that, if one of them separated without such consent, he was to forfeit his share of the family property, and that, if any one wished to dispose of his share, he was to give his brothers the preference. One F purchased at a private sale the share of M, one of the brothers. On this two of the brothers, A and I, brought a suit against F to set aside the sale as contrary to the terms of the ikrarname, and urged their claim to pre-emption. The suit was decreed with a stipulation that the purchase-money should be paid back. This not having been done, F sued M, got a decree, and in execution put up for sale M's rights and interests in the family estate, bought them himself, and took possession. The present suit is by A and I to recover possession on the ground that M had no rights and interests left which could be sold in execution. Held that, as M had never separated, his share had not been forfeited, and that the only other privilege left to the plaintiffs under the ikrar, viz., pre-emption, could not be exercised, inasmuch as M had not sold his share, the sale having been the act of the Court. FERASUT ALI v. Where the sale in respect of which the pre-emptive claim was raised was one made by the Collector as Manager of the Court of Wards and the Collector, before selling the property, issued a proclamation through the tehsildar notifying to all the shareholders that the property was for sale, and that sharers intending to purchase should make offers.—Held that such a notification was not a sufficiently distinct and definite notice of

Construction of—Purchaser of isolated plot of land in mehal—Purchaser of sir land.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village gave a right of pre-emption to “co-sharers in the mehal.” One of the co-sharers brought a suit for pre-emption which the vendee-defendant resisted on ground that he also was a co-sharer in the mehal, and the plaintiff had therefore no preferential right. This contention was based on a former purchase by the defendant under a deed of sale executed by a co-sharer: and comprising (i) an isolated plot of land in the mehal; (ii) sir lands in the mehal. Held by the Full Bench that, it being found that the vendee-defendant had already become a co-sharer in the mehal prior to the date of the purchase which was in question in the suit, the plaintiff had no preferential right of pre-emption. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The decisions of the Full Bench in *Naimat Ali v. One of two co-sharers, entitled to equal shares in an inheritance, having taken possession of the whole, was used by the other for her share, with mesne profits from the date of the suit. To provide costs, the latter had sold to her co-plaintiffs the right to claim half of her share. The defences were—(1) relinquishment of her claim in favour of the defendant; (2) that the defendant had a right of pre-emption as to part, in consequence of the above transaction; (3) that the share in dispute was subject to a proportion of the debts due from the estate of the deceased, chargeable on the whole inheritance; and that, if the plaintiffs should be held to be entitled to a decree, they should also be declared liable to pay, according to shares, their part of all the debts of the deceased liquidated by the defendant, as well as a proportion of money which he had expended, in good faith, in litigation for the protection of the inheritance. As to (1), the two Courts below concurred in the finding that no relinquishment had taken place. As to (2), it was pointed out that there had been no attempt to sell a share of the inheritance, but only to sell a share in a suit; and it was held that the position taken up by the defendant was inconsistent with his claiming to pre-empt, so that pre-emption was inapplicable. As to (3), it was held that, although the plaintiffs could not have a decree for mesne profits during the whole period of the defendant's possession, yet, if any account was to be taken of the defendant's payments, it must also be taken of his receipts; and

51. ——— Meaning of the terms “Patti” and “Patti of mehal”—Co-sharers—N.W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), ss. 166, 168, 188—N.W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), s. 177—Interpretation of statutes.—The expression “patti of a mehal” as used in s. 188 of the N.W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873) means a division of a mehal distinct from the share of an individual co-sharer. The right of pre-emption, therefore, which is given by the above-named section is not exercisable on the sale merely of the share of an individual co-sharer not amounting to such a division of a mehal. Moreover, the provisions of s. 188 of Act XIX of 1873 do not apply to a sale under s. 168 of the same Act of land other than that in respect of which the arrears which it is sold to satisfy accrued. Hence, where the share of a co-sharer in an imperfect pattidari village, not being the land in respect of which the arrears of rent, for the satisfaction of which the said share is sold, are due, is sold under the provisions of s. 177 of the N.W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), no right of pre-emption can be claimed in respect of such sale. So held by EDGE, C.J., and YOUNG, J., MAHMOOD, J., contra. There being no statutory definition of the word patti, that word must be taken in its ordinary acceptation, and in that acceptation it means the share of a pattidar, whether such share amounts to a definite division of a mehal or not. The exigencies of the law of pre-emption require that in s. 188 of Act XIX of 1873, the word patti should be construed in its broader signification as equivalent to any share of a pattidar. The words of s. 168, which provide that land sold under that section is to be proceeded against “as if it were the land on account of which the revenue is due under the provisions of this Act,” render the incidents of sales under s. 166, including pre-emption applicable to sales under s. 168, with the exception that in such case only the defaulter's interest in the land sold passes by the sale. Hence a right of pre-emption would accrue under s. 188 in respect of the compulsory sale of any share of a co-sharer, though such share did not amount to a patti in the sense of a definite division of a mehal. *BAIR NATH v. 53. ——— Effect of perfect partition—Wajib-ul-urz—Co-sharers—Purchase of equity of redemption by mortgagor in possession—Acquiescence—Equitable estoppel.—The wajib-ul-urz of three villages which originally formed a single mehal gave a right of pre-emption to co-sharers in case of transfers of shares to strangers. Afterwards the shares in these villages were made the subject of a perfect partition and divided into separate mehals. Subsequently, by two deeds of sale executed on the 13th January 1884, and registered on the 17th January 1884, some of the original co-sharers sold to strangers their shares in all three villages. At the time of the sale, the shares in two of the villages were in possession of the vendees under a possessory mortgage, the amount due upon which was set off against the purchase money. The share in the third village was, at the time of the sale, in possession of another of the original co-sharers under a possessory mortgage. On the 17th January 1885 this last-mentioned co-sharer brought a suit against the vendors and the vendees to enforce his right of pre-emption under the wajib-ul-urz in respect of the shares sold in the three villages. Held that, notwithstanding the partition of the village into separate mehals, the existing wajib-ul-urz at the time of partition must be presumed to subsist and govern the separate mehals until it was shown that a new one had been made. Gokal Singh v. Mannu Lal, I. L. R., 7 All., 772, referred to. Held also that the Court below was wrong in holding that the plaintiff, by reason of his having omitted in a suit previously brought against him for redemption of his mortgage, and dismissed for want of jurisdiction, to set up in defence any right of pre-emption or to express any desire to purchase, was equitably estopped by acquiescence in the sale from asserting his pre-emptive right. *SHIAM SUNDER v. The plaintiff now sued to enforce his right of pre-emption, and in the course of the suit offered to pay Rs 130. the same patti as the vendor. The deed contained a specification of the interests purchased and the considerations paid by the co-sharers and the stranger vendees respectively. In a suit for pre-emption by certain co-sharers of the same patti as the vendor, the lower Appellate Court held that, although the co-sharers-vendees had a pre-emptive right of the same degree as the plaintiffs, nevertheless they, having joined a stranger with them in purchasing the property, had forfeited their right, and could not resist the claim even in respect of such portions as they had purchased under the sale-deed. Held that this view was erroneous, and that, inasmuch as the deed of sale contained an exact specification of the shares purchased by the co-sharers-vendees, who had an equal right of purchase to that of the plaintiffs in respect of such shares, and as the shares purchased and the consideration paid by the stranger vendee were also exactly specified, the lower Court should not have decreed the claim for pre-emption as to that portion of the property which had been purchased by the co-sharers. *Sheobharios Rai v. 67. — — — — — Claim based upon custom—Evidence afforded by obsolete wajib-ul-urz—Rules of the Board of Revenue for the settlement of the Gorakhpur and Basti districts (B. E. C., 8-1, s. 38).—The plaintiffs brought their suit in 1890 to pre-empt certain property situated in the Gorakhpur district. Their claim was based upon two grounds: one, an alleged contract said to be recorded in and proved by a wajib-ul-urz of 1860 relating to the village in question; and the other, a custom of pre-emption alleged to be existing in the village. The period during which the wajib-ul-urz of 1860 was in force expired prior to the sale which gave rise to the right of pre-emption sought to be enforced. Subsequently to the expiration of that wajib-ul-urz, certain rules had been framed, with reference to the settlement of the Gorakhpur and Basti districts, the material portions of which, for the purposes of the present case, were as follows: "A memorandum of the village customs will be appended to each khewat by the Assistant Settlement Officer, when he verifies the jamabandi, and it will take the place of the document hitherto known as the wajib-ul-urz" * * * "In regard to any custom or constitution peculiar to the mehal, the following matters should be noticed: class (d), s. 25]: (a) Pre-emption (as regards mehals which belong to other than Mahomedan proprietors) when the proprietors expressly demand that it may be noted and proved conclusively that the custom exists." At the new settlement made in accordance with these rules, no mention of the right of pre-emption as obtaining in the mehal in question was recorded. Upon these facts it was held by ENGE, C.J., and BURKITT, J., that having regard to the rules above-mentioned framed by the Board of Revenue for the

Mahomedan law—Immediate and compulsory demands—The wajbuluruz of a village gave a right of pre-emption according to the usage of the country. In a suit for pre-emption there was no evidence to show what in fact was the usage prevailing in the district in regard to pre-emption. There was no evidence that the plaintiff had satisfied the requirements of the Mahomedan law as to immediate and compulsory demands or that there was any custom which absolved him from compliance with those requirements, or that he was at any time willing to pay the actual contract price. Held that, in the absence of evidence of any special custom stated, the suit failed, and must be dismissed. Fakir Rai et al. v. Imambakhsh I L R, Sup Vol 35 Chund, by Bry Lall, v. Goor Sahai, Agra, F B, 1283 and Jai Kver v. Hira Lal, 7 N-W, 3, referred to. RAM PRASAD v. ABDUL KARIM

sharer with the vendors. The defendants to the suit were the vendors, the vendees and others who were rival claimants for pre-emption in the share sold. The rival pre-emptors alone defended the action on the ground among others that plaintiff was not in possession of her own share in the village out of which she alleged that her right to claim pre-emption arose. The Court of first instance dismissed her suit. On appeal the District Judge in effect dismissed her claim as against the defendants who were the rival pre-emptors but gave the plaintiff a right to obtain the share if the other pre-emptors did not avail themselves of the decree which they had obtained in their action. On the 1st of January 1877 plaintiff's second sold in execution of a decree in another suit. Respondent contended that as since the appeal the share out of which plaintiff alleged that her right arose was sold, she could not get any decree now in her favour.

Held that this Court as a Court of appeal has only got to see what was the decree which the Court of first instance should have passed, and if the Court of first instance had wrongly dismissed the claim, the plaintiff cannot be prejudiced by her share having been subsequently sold in execution in another suit, such a sale could not have affected her right to maintain the decree, if she had obtained a decree in her favour in the Court of first instance either on appeal or on appeal nor could it have been made the ground of appeal. Further plaintiff being out of possession of her share at the time she instituted the suit for pre-emption was immaterial. The Court should have ascertained whether the plaintiff was at the date of suit entitled in law to the share out of which her right of pre-emption was alleged to have arisen. Held by MANNING, J. that the passage from Hemilton's Hedaya by Grady, p 562, means that in the pre-emptive tenement the pre-emptor should have a vested ownership and not a mere expectancy of inheritance or a reversionary or any kind of contingent right, or any interest falling short of full ownership. SAKINA BIBI v. in a conditional vendue, even though he might not have obtained a decree establishing or declaring his right, and the right of pre-emption accrued on the date when the conditional sale thus became absolute, yet foreclosure proceedings under the Regulation, being of a purely ministerial character, were not conclusive or even prima facie evidence in a subsequent litigation against the conditional vendor that a valid foreclosure had been duly effected; that strict observance of the requirements of the Regulation were conditions precedent to the right of foreclosure; and that, in the present case, as the plaintiff had not asserted or attempted to prove that all those requirements had been fulfilled so as to result in an actual foreclosure and consequent accrual of pre-emption at the end of the year of grace, no foreclosure was shown to have taken place prior to the compromise of the 19th September 1885, and the plaintiff's right of pre-emption accrued on and must be referred to that date, and consequently extended only to the property to which the compromise related, and the price payable by the plaintiff was the amount specified in the compromise. *Bhadu Mahomed v. The said wajib-ul-urz contained a clause relative to pre-emptive rights to the following effect: "When any musafidar in the patti desires to transfer his share, then first a shareholder in the patti takes it, and if he does not take it, then another man who desires to take it takes it." Held that this clause was declaratory of the village custom, and that it was not intended thereby to adopt the Mahomedan law of pre-emption. *RUSTOM ALI KHAN v. 76. ——— Bhai-band—Suit to enforce the right of pre-emption—Non-joinder of vendor—Mortgage.—In a suit for pre-emption it was objected by the vendee in second appeal that the vendor had not been made a party. Held that, whether the omission to make the vendor a party in a suit to enforce the right of pre-emption renders the suit unmaintainable or not, as the vendee had not been prejudiced by such omission in this case, the objection taken at such a late stage of the case could not be allowed. Held also that the word "bhai-band" in the wajib-ul-urz in this case meant the brotherhood of the village, and not merely those persons who were related by blood. *S. of Deobarampur, sued for pre-emption of certain land, being "resumed revenue free land" in the village, which had been sold to a stranger. The clause of the wajib ul urz under which pre-emption was claimed hissadar is (haqqiyat), the sharer bent on transfer can take it, after that any other person who is interested (sharik) in the village rank by rank can take it. If no person interested in the village takes it, then a stranger may take it. Held that, under the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff had no right of pre-emption in respect of the land claimed by him, the vendor not being, within the meaning of the wajib ul urz, a co-sharer in the village by virtue of his possession of a portion of the resumed muafi. KALLIAN MAL v MADAN MOHAN I L R., 17 All., 447

If none of these take it, then he may transfer it to an outsider. If any co-sharer (i.e., any co-sharer who wishes to sell or mortgage) fail to act as above directed, another co-sharer has the right of enforcing pre-emption in respect of the property. If the term of the mortgaged share of any co-sharer is about to expire and notice of foreclosure has been issued, and the co-sharer mortgagor has not the means to redeem, then another co-sharer, after paying up the money, may take back the share, and when the original mortgagor has the means, he, after paying the money, may take possession of the share. Held that, in the case of a conditional sale of property to which this wajib-ul-urz applied, there were only two stages contemplated by the wajib-ul-urz, and not three. The first stage was at or about the time of the execution of the deed of conditional sale, and at that time pre-emption might be had by a co-sharer at the rate indicated in the wajib-ul-urz. The second stage was when the conditional vendee had brought his suit for foreclosure, and at that time the pre-emptor would have to pay the amount found to be due under the deed of conditional sale. When once, however, the order for foreclosure had been made absolute, the co-sharer's right of pre-emption was gone and extinguished. Gya Bhairu v. Lakhnath Rai I. L. R., 20 All., 103

93. ———— Partition, Effect of—Co-sharers—"Village"—Effect of perfect partition on covenants contained in the wajib-ul-urz.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village contained a covenant among the co-sharers that, in the event of any one of them selling his share, a right of pre-emption should be enforceable, first, by a "near shareholder"; next, by a partner in the thoke; and thirdly, by a partner in the village. The village was subsequently divided into three separate mehals by means of a perfect partition under the N. W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873). Held that the agreement regarding pre-emption remained in force after the partition. The term "village," as used in the wajib-ul-urz, means a definite area of land with houses upon it, and does not necessarily imply a joint ownership of such land, inasmuch as after partition there may remain some community of interest, and things held and used in common by all the inhabitants. Every one who lives in that area has a share in it, and may therefore be regarded as a "shareholder" within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz. Gokal Singh v. Mannu Lal [I. L. R., 7 All., 772]

W. P. Land Revenue Act, 1873, no new wajib-ul-urz has been framed for any of the new mehals, the question whether or how far a contract or a custom of pre-emption recorded in the wajib-ul-urz of the undivided mehal is still in force, or who is entitled to claim the benefit of it, is not capable of any absolute or invariable answer. It depends in each case upon the proper construction of the terms of the particular contract or the proper interpretation of the particular custom recorded, assuming that there is no evidence of any intention on the part of the co-sharers at the time of partition to put an end to the contract or the custom. But there is a strong presumption against of the new mohals, claimed pre-emption under the old wajib ul urz as a "hissadar deh." Held by the Full Bench, upon the construction of the wajib ul urz, that he was not entitled to pre-emption.

common according to the interest of the co-sharers in the village. The wajib ul urz contained the following provision regarding the right of pre-emption: "Each sharer is by all means at liberty to transfer his right and share, but first of all the transfer should be effected by him in favour of his own brothers and nephews who may be sharers and, in case of their refusal, in favour of the other owners of the thoke." Held, in a suit by a sharer in one thoke to enforce a right of pre-emption under the wajib ul urz, in respect of a share in another thoke, that the fact that the plaintiff was common with all the sharers of the different thokes was a sharer in the common lands did not make her a sharer in the vendor's thoke, and she had therefore no right of pre-emption under the wajib ul urz. MAYA RAM v. 96 ——— Nearer co sharer—Mortgage by conditional sale—Limitation—Acquiescence—Equitable estoppel.—The two joint owners of a 2 annas 8 pies share in a village jointly executed two deeds of mortgage by conditional sale, each for a share of 1 anna 4 pies, in favour, respectively, of 1 and 4 co-sharers in the village, and related to the vendors. In 1875 the conditional sale in favour of 4 became absolute, and he was recorded as proprietor of half the share of the vendors, and obtained possession thereof. In 1889 4 foreclosed his mortgage and obtained possession of the other half share. 1 thereupon claimed the right to purchase the half share so acquired by 4 on the allegation that he had a right of pre-emption in respect thereof, having become the vendee in 1875 of the other half share, and therefore being the "nearest co sharer" of the vendors within the meaning of the wajib ul urz, and also being nearer in relationship to the vendors than 4. The wajib ul urz provided that each co-sharer was competent to transfer his own share, but that, when making a transfer, it was incumbent on him to notify the same to his nearest co-sharer, and on his refusal, to other sharers in the village. The lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was estopped from preferring a claim to pre-emption on the ground that he had acquiesced in the conditional sale in favour of the defendant, and also that he had no right to pre-emption under the wajib ul urz. Held that as much as from 1875 to 1882 the only owner of the 2 annas 8 pies share was the plaintiff and the mort-

One of the co-sharers transferred to a stranger 1 biswa and 6 dhurs of a grove or garden in exchange for another piece of land. Held by the Full Bench that this transaction was a transfer of haqiyat within the terms of the wajib-ul-urz. Held also that the plot of land which was given in exchange for the 1 biswa and 6 dhurs must be considered as a price (qimat) within the terms of the wajib-ul-urz. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the word "qimat" must be interpreted in the sense given to it by the Mahomedan law, including not only money, but other kinds of property capable of being valued at a definite sum of money, and covering the consideration of "sale" as well of exchange as defined in ss. 54 and 118 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), respectively. NIAMAT ALI v. ASMAT BIBI . . . I. L. R., 7 All., 626

99. ——— Simple mortgage—"Transfer"—Mortgage—Charge—Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property Act), s. 58.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village gave a right of pre-emption to co-sharers on a transfer (intikal) by sale or mortgage (rahn) by a co-sharer of "rights and interests" (hakkiyat). Per PETHERAM, C.J.—That as a simple mortgage, as defined in s. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, by giving a right to sell, transfers an interest in the property mortgaged, a simple mortgage of his share by a co-sharer created a right of pre-emption under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz. Per MAHMOOD, J.—The circumstance that possession had not been transferred to the mortgagee was one which had no bearing on the question whether a right of pre-emption arose under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz in the case of a simple mortgage. The word "intikal," as used in Hindustani, has the broadest meaning in connection with "alienation," "conveyance," "assignment," or "transfer" of rights in immoveable property. The word "hakkiyat" means rights and interests in the legal sense of the phrase. The word "rahn" is a generic word indicating all that is included in the English word "mortgage," and is not limited to usufructuary mortgages, but includes simple mortgages also. When general words are used in a document, they must be understood in a general sense, unless they are accompanied by any expression limiting or restricting their ordinary meaning, or unless such limitation or restriction arises from necessary implication. The words "intikal," "hakkiyat," and "rahn" in the wajib-ul-urz could be understood only in the most general sense. "Mortgage," as understood in Indian law, includes simple mortgage as well as usufructuary, and one is as much a "transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property" as the other. A simple mortgage is a "transfer," being the transfer of the right of sale. Held, therefore, by MAHMOOD, J., that a right of pre-emption accrued under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz in the case of a simple mortgage by a co-sharer of his share to a "stranger." Per BRODHURST, J., that one of the entries in a statement showing the transfers which had taken place in the village at or about the time the wajib-ul-urz was framed, which statement was connected with the wajib-ul-urz, related to a simple mortgage, from which it appeared that it was the intention that the co-sharers should have the right of pre-emption in all cases of mortgage, whether usufructuary or otherwise, and therefore a right of pre-emption accrued under the terms of the wajib-ul-urz in the case of a simple mortgage. Per DUTHOIT, J., that a pre-emptive right was raised by the terms of the wajib-ul-urz only upon the occurrence of a transfer of a share in the property of the mehal, and a simple mortgage was not a transfer of property. OLDFIELD, J.—The word "transfer" used in the wajib-ul-urz was not intended to refer to a simple mortgage, but to mortgages where possession of the property passes to the mortgagee. *SHEORATAN KUAR v. 100. ——— Mortgage by conditional sale—"Transfer"—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58.—A clause in the wajib-ul-urz of a village gave a right of pre-emption in respect of "transfer" by the sharers of their rights and interests by sale and mortgage. Held that a deed of conditional sale of a share in the village, which did not transfer possession, was a transfer of an interest in the village, and was sufficient to let in the right of pre-emption. *Sheoratan Kuar v. 102. ——— Sale without registration of transfer—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—Fraudulent omission to transfer by registered instrument.—The wajib-ul-urz of a village gave the co-sharers a right of pre-emption in cases where any one of them should wish to "transfer his share wholly or partly by sale or mortgage." One of the co-sharers entered into a transaction by which he transferred the possession of his share to a stranger for Rs 300 and had mutation of names effected in the Revenue Department, but, in order to avoid the right of pre-emption, the parties omitted to execute or register a deed of sale in respect of the transfer. Held by the Full Bench (MAHMOOD, J., dissenting) that the transaction gave rise to the right of pre-emption within the meaning of the wajib-ul-urz. Per PETHERAM, C.J., that the terms of the wajib-ul-urz meant that, if any co-sharer transferred his right wholly or partly, the right of pre-emption should arise; that although the legal interest in the share was never transferred, the effect of the transaction in question was to transfer absolutely the whole right of possession from the vendor to the vendee, and that it was therefore such a transfer as let in the right of pre-emption. Per STRAIGHT J that as much as the defendants deliberately omitted to observe the necessary legal formality of a registered instrument with the object of defeating the pre-

BRODHEURST JJ that the failure of the parties to the transfer to comply with the requirements of s 54 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) as to the manner in which the transfer should be made did not alter the nature of the transaction or affect the fact that a sale had been made and could not affect a pre-emptor's right in respect of it. Per MAHMOOD J that a valid and perfected sale was a condition ing of the wajib ul urz that the application for mutation of names not having been registered the provisions of s 54 of the Transfer of Property Act prevented it from taking effect as a sale or passing the ownership from the vendor to the vendee and that therefore under the wajib ul urz the right of pre-emption could not arise. JANKI v GIRJANATH

One of the co-sharers, without first offering his share to the other co-sharers, sold it to a stranger, for a price higher than that which would be payable according to the above-mentioned provision. of the wajib-ul-urz relating to sales between co-sharers. Held by the Full Bench that the condition of the wajib-ul-urz regarding the price to be paid for the share was still binding on the land, notwithstanding the sale; that a co-sharer was entitled to purchase the share at the price agreed before it could be sold to anyone else, and in case of sale to a stranger could call on the vendor and the purchaser to hand it over on payment of such price; and that, if the stranger vendee had paid more than was payable according to the wajib-ul-urz, he was entitled to recover it from the vendor. *Akbar Singh v. A creditor of the decree holder applied for attachment of the money so paid in, and ultimately was allowed by the Court to withdraw a portion of it. One of the brothers having died, his widow sold his share which he had inherited without such an offer to the surviving brothers, who thereupon sued her and her vendee for possession up on payment of what they alleged to be the value of the property (viz., Rs. 27). The Munsif found the value to be greater (viz., Rs. 95), and set aside the sale without giving possession. The lower Appellate Court made an order that, if plaintiffs deposited Rs. 95 in Court, their appeal would be decreed. The plaintiffs deposited the amount, and a decree for possession was given them. Held that neither of the Courts had the power to make the decrees which they did, and the order of the lower Appellate Court to deposit the money was not binding on the plaintiffs who had no right under their contract to an election, after the value had been ascertained, whether they would purchase at that price or not. Quare—Can a perpetual covenant as to the disposition of land be enforced? RAIPORA SOONDUREE v. the payment of Rs. 125 due under the first Court's decree could not be said to have been reduced by the pre-emptor subsequently executing against the amount so paid the order of that Court in his favour for costs, and that the subsequent payment of Rs. 75 within the period prescribed by the Appellate Court satisfied the requirements of that Court's decree, subject to the judgment debtors right to recover the costs realized in execution of the first Court's decree. Held by TRELL, J., contra, that, although the pre-emptor had once made a payment, which for a few days was a compliance with the first Court's decree, such compliance became immaterial when that decree was modified on appeal, and as he had never had in any Court a credit for Rs. 200, as required by the Appellate Court's decree which alone was the decree in the cause, he had failed to fulfil the condition essential to pre-emption, and therefore the defendant's application should be allowed. BAHMUKAND v. below found on the evidence that the room and windows had been completed and in use for a period of twenty years prior to the date of suit, May 18th, 1870; that the plaintiffs had enjoyed the light and air through the windows for a period of twenty years without any interruption by the defendants; and it being proved that the defendants had by buildings obstructed the light and air coming to the plaintiff's windows, he granted an injunction commanding the defendants to take down so much of the wall as rose to the height of more than five feet above the level of the plaintiff's floor, and restraining them, the defendants, from continuing their building above the height of five feet. Held on appeal per COUNCH, C.J.—By the English law before the Prescription Act (which is the law governing the case), the presumption of a grant, in the case of a claim to the access and use of light for a building, was a presumption of fact, the presumption being founded on the consent or acquiescence of the owner of the servient tenement. Acquiescence implies knowledge, and knowledge may be presumed where the owner is in possession. There must be knowledge for twenty years, at any rate; if the knowledge were for a lesser period, whether there was a grant would be a question of fact, and no presumption could arise. The question of whether or not there was knowledge is one preliminary to the consideration whether or not a grant is to be presumed. Held on the evidence that there had been no knowledge on the part of the defendants during the whole time, and therefore there had not been a twenty years' enjoyment of the light and air with their acquiescence. Held per MARKBY, J.—The presumption of a lost grant is one of fact. An uninterrupted user for twenty years would be evidence from which, taken with other circumstances, it might be inferred that a grant had existed. No "patientia," or "submission" on the part of the defendants being shown so as to constitute an acknowledgment of the existence of the right of the plaintiffs to the light and air, the defendants were entitled to succeed. BHUBAN MOHAN BANERJEE v. ELLIOTT 6 B. L. R., 85

Held on appeal to the Privy Council that the law of prescription applicable to India was the English law previous to the passing of the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. IV, c. 71. In order to establish a right to light and air, an uninterrupted user of at least twenty years, with the acquiescence of the owner of the servient tenement, must be shown. In a suit to restrain the defendants from obstructing the light and air through certain windows of a house belonging to the plaintiffs, it was shown that the enjoyment of the alleged right began on 14th April 1850, the windows then being in a sufficiently finished state to create the right. In March 1870 the plaintiffs received notice from the defendants of their intention to erect a building which would have the effect of obstructing the passage of light and air through the plaintiffs' windows. The building was actually commenced on 23rd March 1870, but it was not actually raised to such a height as to amount to an obstruction until some days after the twenty years had elapsed. Held that there was not an enjoyment for twenty years with the acquiescence of the defendants such as entitled the plaintiffs to maintain the suit. Quære—Whether proof of constructive knowledge on the part of the defendants would not be sufficient to show their acquiescence.

38. ————— Act IX of 1871, s. 27—Enjoyment "as of right"—Unity of possession—The English Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. IV, c. 71), s. 3—Grant independent of user.—In a suit to restrain the defendant from obstructing the access of light and air through certain windows of the plaintiff's house, it appeared that both the tenements had formerly constituted the joint property of a Hindu family, and that in 1835 a partition took place among the various members composing it, by which the tenement in the occupation of the plaintiff became separated from that occupied by the defendant; and that the latter property was, in 1860, purchased by the plaintiff jointly with one G, but under the purchase the plaintiff took sole possession thereof; that in 1867, however, he relinquished it in favour of G in pursuance of an award, wherein it was found the plaintiff had no right or title thereto; and that in 1870 it was purchased by the defendant, who, in 1871 and 1872, erected the obstructions complained of by the plaintiff. Held that though, in the interval between 1860 and 1867, the plaintiff had not such an estate in the servient tenement as to constitute unity of title in him to the two tenements, and thereby extinguish all easements between them, yet the unity of possession in the plaintiff during that period excluded the operation of s. 27 of Act IX of 1871, as the enjoyment during that time was not "of right." Semble—In order that the enjoyment should be "of right," there must be an adverse exercise of it as against the servient holder. Act IX of 1871 does not exclude other modes than therein provided of acquiring an easement by enjoyment. In this case, applying the law of prescription in force in Calcutta prior to 1871, which was the English law previous to the passing of 2 & 3 Will. IV, c. 71, a grant might be implied independently of user; and, under the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff was entitled to such right to easements of light and air as can be inferred from enjoyment, i.e., a right to restrain the defendant from committing any act whereby the access of light or air should be so diminished as with respect to air to prove a nuisance or injurious to health, and with respect to light to render the house unfit for comfortable habitation. MODHOOSOODUN DEX v. defendant. The defendant in his written statement denied that his new house would cause material damage to the plaintiff. He alleged that his old house, which was higher than the plaintiff's, had a projecting cornice, so that hardly any direct light came to the plaintiff's windows, which were almost, not entirely, lighted by the light that came from the end of the gully. He further stated that his new house would have no cornice, and that he had widened the gully, so that light to the plaintiff's windows would not be appreciably diminished, but that, even if the passage had not been widened, there could have been little diminution of light. He also alleged that the plaintiff had other windows and sources of light than the said six windows. While denying all damage, the defendant, however, to avoid litigation and without prejudice, paid into Court Rs 200, which, he said, was more than sufficient to compensate the plaintiff. After filing the suit, the plaintiff obtained a rule for an injunction on the date of which the walls of the defendant's house had been built up as far as the second floor. The rule was subsequently discharged, the defendant consenting that the cause should be argued at the hearing as if the new house was then in the same condition. The defendant, however, subsequently continued to build, and at the date of hearing it was practically complete. The lower Court (STARLING, J.) found that prior to the building of the new house direct light came to the plaintiff's windows to the extent at all events of 5 inches, and in addition to this considerable amount of lateral light came to the windows over the defendant's roof. The Court held that, as the plaintiff had a right to this light by prescription, he was absolutely entitled to the whole of it; that the defendant had by his new building cut off all the direct light, and that practically all the light left to the plaintiff was reflected light, the amount of which depended on the condition in which the defendant might choose to keep the walls of his house. Under these circumstances, the lower Court, looking at the house as if it was still in the condition in which it was at the time the injunction was discharged, held that the plaintiff was entitled to a mandatory injunction, and directed the defendant to remove the upper portion of the house, which had been built since that time. On appeal,—Held that, although the plaintiff's light had been sensibly diminished by the defendant's new building, there had not been such a large, material, and substantial damage as to require interference by injunction, or that the plaintiff's room had been rendered unfit for the purpose for which it might reasonably be expected to be used. The Appeal Court therefore varied the decree of STARLING, J., and refused an injunction, but ordered the defendant to pay the plaintiff Rs 500 as damages. GHANASHAM NILKANT NADKARNI v. s. 54.—A promise was made regarding the access of light and air, by the plaintiff's predecessor in title, to windows placed by him in the upper part of his house which was separated by a narrow space from a building opposite belonging then to the defendant's predecessor. This promise was that the owner of the house would make no objection to the blocking up of the windows in question when the owner of the building opposite should rebuild it and raise it to a higher elevation. The owner of the windows accepted this promise. After the lapse of twenty years, the defendant, having given notice that he would act on the agreement, proceeded to rebuild; and he raised his building higher than the old one, causing the obstruction of which the plaintiff now complained. The High Court (FARRAN, J.) in its Original Jurisdiction decided that the case was not one for an injunction, but for damages, and gave the plaintiff a decree for a sum as compensation. On appeal, the Appellate Bench of the High Court (PARSONS and STRACHEY, JJ.) held that the plaintiff had made out no prescriptive right to light and air, and the cases of Dhanjibhoy v. Lisboa, I. only amount of light for a dwelling house which can be claimed by prescription or by length of time (whether prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871) without an actual grant is such an amount as is reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the house. Rule laid down in Bagram v Khettranath Karformah, 3 B. L. R. O C, 41, followed. The right of air is co-extensive with the right to light. To give a right of action, either prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871, in a case (where there is no express contract on the subject) for an interference with the access of air to dwelling houses by building on adjoining land, the obstruction must be such as to cause what is technically called a nuisance to the house, in other words, to render the house unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation or business. There is no such right as a right to the uninterrupted flow of south breeze as such. The "45 degree rule" is not a positive rule of law, but is a circumstance which the Court may take into consideration and is especially valuable when the proof of the obstruction is not definite or satisfactory. DELHI AND LONDON BANK v HEM LAL DUTT. 53. ——— Right of passage—Unity of possession—Severance—Nuisance arising from acts of several persons.—The words "appurtenant" or "belonging" will ordinarily carry only actual existing easement, and therefore will carry no right of way over the land of the grantor, though, under certain circumstances, even these words will have a wider construction. Where further words are used, such as "therewith held or used," such words will carry a way formerly enjoyed as an easement, but as to which the right has been suspended by unity of possession. But such words will not carry a way made by the owner of both properties during the unity of possession for his own greater convenience in the use of the two properties jointly. But where, during the unity of possession, a way, which has never existed as an easement, is in fact used for the convenience of one of the tenements afterwards severed, the authorities show that the words in question are large enough to carry it. One who has a right of passage over any place must not, any more than the owner of the soil might, use it in an excessive or improper manner so as to obstruct the exercise by others of their rights. The acts of several persons may together constitute a nuisance, though the damage occasioned by the acts of any one, if taken alone, would not be appreciable. *CHUNDER KOOMAR MOOKERJI v. ran into a tank in a village which was the plaintiff's property, and to compel the removal of sluices erected across the said channel by the first defendant's predecessor in office, and used for the purpose of diverting the flow of the water. Held that acquiescence in the sense of mere submission to the interruption of the enjoyment does not destroy or impair an easement. To be effectual for that purpose, it must be attributable to an intention on the part of the owner to abandon the benefit before enjoyed. Held also that the diversion of the water was a continuing injury down to the time of the institution of the suit and that the plaintiff's suit was not barred. Held also that it must appear from the circumstances in evidence in such case that the interference or obstruction complained of is not a trivial, but a substantial injury in order to warrant relief by way of injunction. Held also that the right to an easement in the flow of water through an artificial water course is as valid against the Government as it is against a private owner of land. Held per SCORLAND, C J—That the grant of an easement may be presumed from mere continued user of the privilege openly enjoyed by the occupiers of the dominant tenement as of right throughout any long period of time without interruption on the part of the proprietor of the servient tenement but with this qualification, that the user should be for at least the period of adverse possession which is prescribed by s 1, cl 12, of the Act of Limitations, as a bar to the enforcing of title to corporeal property. Per INNES, J—That no precise period of uninterrupted enjoyment can be fixed as sufficient of itself to establish a right to an easement. PONNUSAWMI TEVAR & COLLECTOR OF MADRAS defined channel over the lands of others may exist independently of the provisions of s 27 of the Limitation Act, 1871. When such a right is claimed as a hereditary and customary right and evidence is given in support of long user, such evidence may be sufficient to justify the Court in presuming a grant of the easement, and a Court is not justified in dismissing the suit on the ground that there had been no user by the plaintiff within two years prior to suit. SHINIVASA RAO SAHEB (JAGIEDAR OF ABNI) v SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

Even when the dominant and servient tenements are the property of different persons, a man may license an act in its inception, and yet be entitled to relief when the act is found to have injurious consequences which he could not have contemplated at the time of the license. KESAVA PILLAI & PANDU REDDI

It appeared that a channel called Kaduvai had, by means of a branch, for with defer open from the Mallattar channel. The supply from this was insufficient, and the second defendant, the Superintendent Engineer (representing Government), designed a new channel from the Kaduvai to supplement the deficiency of the Mallattar. The water of the Kaduvai was diverted into the new channel at a in the Kaduvai channel without subtraction or diminution by the defendants or by the Government, represented by the second defendant, and that any diminution, though not causing loss, was an invasion of their rights; second, that if they had not such absolute right, they had a right to a supply of water for the necessary purposes of irrigation and otherwise for their village, and that the possibility of loss at some future time, arising from a possible wrongful diminution of the water to their detriment through the new sluice and channel, entitled them to the relief claimed. Upon the first point,—Held that the plaintiffs had not the extensive and exclusive right to the water contended for by them, but that their right was limited to the beneficial enjoyment of the water for the irrigation and other necessary purpose of their tenancies as heretofore enjoyed. Also that the Government, as proprietor of the Kaduvai channel and water in it, had, subject to the above limited use by the plaintiffs and other villages in the same position as the plaintiffs, a right to distribute the water of the Kaduvai channel for the benefit of the public. *Ponusami Tevar v. The only ground upon which the plaintiffs' claim was put was that they had received the water for a long time. The District Court held that the Government were authorized to regulate the distribution of water in such cases. Held, on regular appeal, per HOLLOWAY, J., that no legal right was shown by the plaintiffs which could have been violated by the defendants, and that, if such right were established, there was nothing to show that a decree for damages would not have been the proper remedy. Per INNES, J.—That the evidence did not show any diminution of the supply of water below the quantity to which the plaintiffs were entitled. *VENKATA REDDY v. 65. ————— Interruption—Abandonment.—The plaintiff claimed a prescriptive right to the flow of the surface drainage water from the land of the defendant on to his land. Held that such an easement can be acquired only where the water flows in a definite channel. In a suit for interrupting the flow of water from the land of the defendant to the land of the plaintiff it appeared that eight years before suit, the defendant had diverted the water, and that it had been diverted ever since. Held that the right, if acquired, would not necessarily be lost by the interruption, but that, if the plaintiff acquiesced during that time in the interruption, it of water in this channel and for damages. Held that the flow of water in the channel having existed as an apparent and continuous easement in fact at the time of the execution of the lease in 1865, a right to it passed by implication under that lease, and that the plaintiff was accordingly entitled to it, that the defendant, whose lease was subject to that right, was not entitled to interrupt the flow, but that he might use the water in a reasonable manner, as it flowed through his land. MORGAN v. 72. ——— Obstructing water-course—Presumption of title founded on user—Limitation Act 1871, s. 27, and art 31—Continuing act of wrong—More than twenty years and possibly fifty or sixty, before suit, the plaintiff's ancestors and predecessors in estate had constructed and used a pain, or artificial water-course, on the defendants' land, making compensation to them. The pain, by a channel at one part of its course, contributed to the water in a tal, or reservoir belonging to the defendants, and by a channel at another part took the water which overflowed from the tal, after the defendants had used as much of the water therein as they required. Less than twenty years before, the suit, the defendants, without authority, obstructed the flow of water along the pain in several places. The Courts below differed as to whether some of these obstructions had not been made more than two years before the suit, the rest having been made within that period. Held that the provisions of Act IX of 1871—a remedial Act and neither prohibitory nor exhaustive—did not exclude, or interfere with, the acquirement of rights otherwise than under them. A title might be acquired under that Act by a person having no other right at all, but it did not exclude, or interfere with, other titles and modes of acquiring easements. And s. 27, by allowing a user of twenty years, if exercised until within two years of suit, under the conditions prescribed, to give, without more, a title, did not prevent proof of an easement founded on another title independently of the Act. Such a long enjoyment as the plaintiff had proved should be referred to a legal origin, and the long user of the pain and of the superfluous water of the tal afforded evidence giving rise to a presumption that a grant, or an agreement, had been made creating an easement. Although, on the assumption that some of the obstructions in question had existed for more than two years before the suit, the plaintiff might not have shown a right under Act IX of 1871, s. 27, yet he did not require its aid. Held also that such obstructions being continuous acts, as to which the cause of action accrued de die in diem, Act IX of 1871, sch. II, part V, cl. 31, fixing two years from the date of the obstruction as the period of limitation "for obstructing a water-course," did not preclude a suit complaining of obstructions, though made more than two years preceding the date of the commencement of the suit. RAMPR KORN v. The issue as to the ownership of the land on which the streams rose was undecided. Held (1) The Easement Act only declared the existing law as to easements over water; (2) An easement can therefore be acquired in regard to the water of the rainfall. But surface water not flowing in a stream, and not permanently collected in a pool, tank, or otherwise, is not a subject of easement by prescription, though it may be the subject of an express grant or contract; (3) It is the natural right of every owner of land to collect or dispose of all water on the surface which does not pass in a defined channel; (4) Riparian owners are entitled to use and consume the water of the stream for drinking and household purposes, for watering their cattle, for irrigating their land, and for purposes of manufacture, subject to the conditions (i) that the use is reasonable, (ii) that it is required for their purposes as owners of the land, and (iii) that it does not destroy or render useless or materially diminish or affect the application of the water by inferior riparian owners in the exercise either of their natural right or their right of easement if any; (5) It was therefore necessary to ascertain where the streams rose, and the course, source, and length of their tributaries. PERUMAL v. s 408—S 370 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requires that in a case in which the accused is sentenced to imprisonment a Presidency Magistrate shall record a brief statement of the reasons for the conviction. It is not sufficient for him to record that the offence is proved, for that may necessarily be implied to be his opinion from the fact that he has convicted the accused. The law contemplates something further as the reason for the conviction.

vested in an agent are not so much matter of law as matter of fact. If it be proved that a person acted ordinarily as an agent for the defendant in buying and selling articles of merchandise, the fact of his not being proved to have previously purchased a particular kind of article would not necessarily operate against the plaintiff's case. The Court, in deciding the question of agency, must look to the general evidence on the record. RAM BAKS LAL v. KISHORI MOHAN SHAHA

8. ———— Factors, Shipments by — Consignees — Custom of Calcutta. — Factors having an interest, by reason of their advances in their principal's goods, are justified in shipping those goods for sale, either "on account of those concerned," or "on account of themselves," unless their general authority was controlled by instructions from their principal or by contract. The evidence failing to show that any particular usage or custom qualifying the law of England as between principal and factor prevails in Calcutta. Held that the powers and duties of the factors in making consignments of their principal's goods must be determined by the general mercantile law. Factors entrusted with possession of their principal's goods, and having advanced upon them, shipped the goods to London, drawing bills against them in their own names, and selling the bills with the shipping documents in the market. The acceptance of the factors' bills by the consignees, and the delivery of the shipping documents to them, made them the pledgees, but did not alter the character of the transaction, which was one whereby the factors had pledged the goods for the payment of bills on which they (and not the principal) were liable as drawers for an amount exceeding the value of the goods. In such a case no privity exists between the consignees and the undisclosed principal. Held therefore that, a loss having occurred on the shipments, the principal was liable to the factors' estate for the full amount of re-drafts representing that loss, although the factors had become insolvents, and had in fact paid only a small dividend on the re-drafts. *MIRTUNJOY CHUCKERBUTTY v. 9. ———— Pledge by agent without authority—Stat. 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39, ss. 1 and 3—Factors Act (XX of 1844)—Notice of agents' malá fides. —Where an agent entrusted with a document of title to goods pledged it malá fide, or without authority, it was necessary, in order to deprive the transaction of the protection given by the 1st section of the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 39, and to bring it within the proviso of the 3rd section, that the jury should find categorically that the lender had notice of the agent's malá fides or want of authority. To prove such notice, it was sufficient to show that the circumstances attending the transaction were such as that a reasonable man, and a man of business, applying his understanding to them, would certainly infer that the agent had not authority to make the pledge or that he was acting malá fide in respect thereof

10. ———— Banian—Del credere agent—Dealings between Native and European firm. —G & S & Co. employed R to make purchases for them in the bazar, upon orders which were in force for two days, and they imposed restrictions on R's authority to pledge their credit, which were not made known to those with whom he dealt. His remuneration was to be certain dustoor on the purchases, and he paid and gave receipts for the jute, as agents for G & S & Co. He furnished accounts specifying the price of the goods and the expenses incurred by him upon them, and upon being paid he affixed his receipts to them. The purchases were unusually large, and in R's books G & S & Co. were debited with the amount paid for the goods, R retaining no interest in, or profit out of, it. J S, one of the vendors to R, sued G & S & Co. for the price of some of the goods so purchased by R. Held that a general authority implies all powers necessary, or usual, or proper, as means to effectuate the purposes for which it was created. A banian is a del credere agent with regard to his employer in making purchases, and is a principal with reference to third persons. Held also that a person who has been allowed to represent himself as agent of a merchant under a general authority is not as such a banian; that when a native dealer makes purchases for a European house, the presumption is that the vendor gave credit to the native dealer; and that goods having been purchased for an employer and entered to his debit, and receipts given for them in his name, raises no presumption that the buyer was a banian. GRANT, SMITH & Co. v. JUGGOBUNDOO SHAW . Bourke, A. O. C., 17: 2 Hyde, 301

Held in the same case in the Court below—In the absence of a specific contract, a European firm in Calcutta is not bound by a contract made by third parties with their banian. JUGGOBUNDOO SHAW v. GRANT, SMITH & Co. . 2 Hyde, 129: Cor., 47

11. ———— Agent exceeding authority—Variation in time for delivery. —Where a principal instructed his agent to enter into a contract for the delivery of cotton at the end of Kartik, but the agent entered into a contract for the delivery thereof by the middle of that month, it was held that the agent exceeded his authority in such a manner as to exempt the principal from liability upon the contract. Though the objection assigned by a principal for repudiating a contract at the time of such repudiation be unfounded, he is not precluded from subsequently availing himself of other valid objections. *ABEAPA NAYAK v. 12. ———— Taking advances. —A native lady, possessing an estate in a district in which she did not reside, opened an account with a banker, through her son, as agent, to provide for the punctual payment of Government revenue, and to meet current expenses. Held that such a

27. ——— Authority to sue on behalf of principal.—In a suit, under Act X of 1859, where plaintiff sues as a gomashtha of the zamindar, it is not necessary that a power-of-attorney or any other formal document conferring a special power on the plaintiff should be produced; if it is proved from the evidence that he filled that character. MADHO SINGH v. GUNESHEE LALL 2 Agra, 275

28. ——— Tahsildar, Power of—Act X of 1859, s. 69.—A newly-appointed tahsildar stands in the same position in respect to arrears of rent which accrued during the time of his predecessor as in respect to rents accruing during his own time, and may take advantage of s. 69, Act X of 1859, in respect of one as well as the other. Held (by MARKBY, J.) that no one can be plaintiff in a suit for rent except the person who has the right to recover; the only effect of s. 69 being to enable the person who is employed in the collection of rents, to sue as agent. Held also (by MARKBY, J.) that, though it has been decided that a general authority to collect rents and to sue for them must be stamped if, in writing, it has not yet been decided whether such authority must be in writing. MODHOOSOODUN SINGH v. MORAN & Co. 11 W. R., 43

29. ——— Naib, Power of—Power of mofussil naib to grant pottahs at fixed rents.—As it does not fall within the ordinary scope of the duties of a mofussil naib to grant pottahs for fixed rents, it is requisite in such cases that express authority should be proved to make the grants valid. GOLUCK-MONEE DABEA v.
